1.18 · Geographical Objects and Features · Regions Below the Surface of the Earth

the world below a place or region which is low As in the case of ὑψωμα[a] (1.13), βάθος may be interpreted as a supernatural force ([e]).

The phrase κατώτερα μέρη τῆς γῆς ‘the lower parts of the earth’ may likewise refer to ‘the world below’ as in εἰς τὰ κατώτερα μέρη τῆς γῆς ‘down into the lower parts of the earth’ ROM 8:39 (see 83.54). Some scholars, however, understand this expression as being a reference to the earth which is low in contrast with heaven. On the basis of such an interpretation one may render ROM 8:39 as ‘he came down to the earth itself.’

ROM 8:39

12.47 · Supernatural Beings and Powers · Supernatural Powers

powers of the world below (a figurative extension of meaning of βάθος[a] ‘depth,’ 81.8) supernatural powers in the region below the earth See 12.46 for an illustrative passage in ROM 8:38 ROM 8:39. For another interpretation of βάθος in ROM 8:39, see βάθος[d] 1.18.

As in the case of ὑψωμα[b] (12.46), βάθος[e] has been interpreted by some as indicating merely the distance which a person might be separated from God, but most scholars assume that the reference here is to ‘the powers of the world below.’

28.76 · Know · Not Able To Be Known, Secret

Collocation: τὰ βάθη

deep secrets, secrets difficult to find out about (figurative extension of meaning of βάθος[a] ‘depth,’ 81.8) the content of knowledge which is very difficult to know Only rarely can one use a literal rendering of τὰ βάθη or τὰ βάθη in referring to secrets. In some instances it may be possible to use an expression such as ‘far away’ or ‘distant,’ and in other cases one can use expressions meaning ‘hard’ or ‘difficult.’ More often than not, however, the closest equivalent of τὰ βάθη and τὰ βάθη in this type of context is either an expression of degree using a term such as ‘very’ (for example, ‘that which is very secret’) or an expression implying ‘that which is hidden’ or ‘that which is difficult to discover.’

39.15 · Hostility, Strife · Division

Collocation: πῦρ βάλλω

to cause discord, to cause division (an idiom, literally: to throw fire) to cause discord and contention Some translators have preferred to retain the literal rendering of this expression in LUK 12:49, since this seems to be necessary in view of the larger figurative context, which speaks of ‘how I wish it were already kindled’ (τί θέλω εἰ ἥδη ἀνήφθη). A strictly literal translation may, however, be understood in a completely physical sense, namely, ‘to set the world on fire.’ There are a number of quite diverse interpretations of the significance of this expression in LUK 12:49. Some have assumed, for example, that it refers to the fire of Pentecost.

βαπτίζω (G0907)

verb | βάπτω

53.31 · Religious Activities · Purify, Cleanse

to wash, to purify, washing, purification to wash (in some contexts, possibly by dipping into water), with a view to making objects ritually acceptable It is also possible to understand βαπτίζονται in MRK 7:4 as a middle form meaning ‘to wash themselves.’

There is some doubt as to the precise extent to which βαπτίζω, καταβαπτίζω, and βαπτισμός in MRK 7:4 involve ritual cleansing, but the context would seem to imply this, particularly in view of the relationship of such washing to the rules followed by Jews in general and Pharisees in particular.

MRK 7:4 · LUK 11:38

53.41 · Religious Activities · Baptize

to baptize, baptism to employ water in a religious ceremony designed to symbolize purification and initiation on the basis of repentance¹ According to the Didache (early second century) different forms of baptism were practiced in the early church, but with evident preference given to immersion.

The baptism practiced by John the Baptist would seem to reflect far more the Jewish pattern of ritual washing than the type of baptism employed by Christians, which constituted a symbol of initiation into the Christian community on the basis of belief in and loyalty to Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior. There seems, however, to be no reason to employ a different expression for baptism in the case of John than in the case of the early Christians. Most translators actually employ a transliterated form of the Greek term βαπτίζω, but in some languages this is both awkward as well as inappropriate, especially if another term or expression has already been employed and is widely accepted by groups practicing various types or forms of baptism. In some languages, for example, one may employ an expression such as ‘to enter the water’ or ‘to undergo the ritual involving water.’ Such expressions do not necessarily imply the quantity of water nor the particular means by which water is applied.

to suffer, to undergo (an idiom, literally: to be baptized with a baptism) to be overwhelmed by some difficult experience or ordeal It is usually not possible to employ the general term for ‘baptism’ to indicate a difficult trial or ordeal. On the other hand, there may be a serious problem involved in using a technical term for ‘ordeal,’ since such an expression may imply merely a ‘proof of innocence.’ In a number of languages, therefore, one can best translate the idiom simply as ‘to suffer greatly.’

non-Greek a person not participating in Greek culture and civilization (βάρβαρος contrasts with Ἕλλην[a] ‘Greek,’ 11.90, with the focus on culture rather than on language; see 1CO 14:11 at 11.94) It would be a mistake in the case of ROM 1:14 to speak merely of ‘Greeks and barbarians’ or ‘Greeks and savages.’ By NT times Ἕλλην (see 11.90) would have included most of those who participated in one way or another in the culture of the Greco-Roman world. Accordingly, one may render the contrast in ROM 1:14 as ‘the civilized and the uncivilized.’

native people, uncivilized, foreigners the native people of an area in which a language other than Greek or Latin was spoken (such persons would be regarded as being outside the civilized world of NT times) In rendering this expression in ACT 28:2 it would be possible in some languages to translate ‘the people there who spoke a strange language were friendly to us’ or ‘the local inhabitants of that island were kind to us.’ ἔσομαι τῷ λαλοῦντι βάρβαρος καὶ ὁ λαλῶν ἐν ἐμοὶ βάρβαρος ‘I will be a foreigner to the one who speaks, and the one who speaks will be a foreigner to me’ 1CO 14:11. prison guard, torturer (derivative of βασανίζω ‘to torture,’ 38.13) a person serving as a guard in a prison, whose function was to torture prisoners as a phase of judicial examination It is difficult to know in the case of MAT 18:34 if βασανιστής is to be understood in the specific sense of ‘torturer’ (in which case it could be classified after 38.13) or only in terms of ‘prison guard.’ The use of βασανιστής in MAT 18:34 may simply be an instance of literary hyperbole. As such it may be possible to translate the expression in MAT 18:34 as ‘his master was very angry and handed him over to prison guards to torture him until he should pay back the whole amount.’

37.64 · Control, Rule · Rule, Govern

rule, reign the action of ruling as a king, with the implication of complete authority and the possibility of being able to pass on the right to rule to one's son or near kin It is generally a serious mistake to translate the phrase ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ 'the kingdom of God' as referring to a particular area in which God rules. The meaning of this phrase in the NT involves not a particular place or special period of time but the fact of ruling. An expression such as 'to enter the kingdom of God' thus does not refer to 'going to heaven' but should be understood as 'accepting God's rule' or 'welcoming God to rule over.'

Collocation: βαστάζω τὸν σταυρόν

to be prepared to suffer even unto death, to take up one's cross (a productive idiomatic expression, literally: to carry one's cross) to be prepared to endure severe suffering, even to the point of death The idiom 'to carry one's cross' or 'to take up one's cross' involves a number of important features of meaning. Unfortunately, this expression is frequently not understood correctly by many people who hear it or even use it. One reason for this is the actual absence of crucifixion in modern society. If a literal translation is to be employed, then some marginal note will probably be necessary in order to indicate clearly the full implications of such a statement.

Collocation: ἡ κοιλία βαστάζει to be pregnant with, to carry in the womb (an idiom, literally: the womb carries) to experience the process of pregnancy It may, however, be necessary in some languages to render LUK 11:27 as 'fortunate is the woman who gave you birth,' since a literal reference to carrying in the womb may seem unduly crude.

LUK 11:27

¹ ROM 11:18 It is possible to interpret βαστάζω in ROM 11:18 in a more or less literal sense, namely 'to carry' or 'to bear' (see 15.188), but the overall context of ROM 11:18 is figurative. ² GAL 6:17 It is difficult to know the extent to which βαστάζω στίγματα should be regarded as an idiom. It is possible to understand this expression to mean that Paul had the scars from wounds which were similar to those of Jesus, but it seems far better to understand this in a more figurative sense, despite the fact that one cannot determine precisely the extent to which such a phrase had become a standardized idiom.

frog tailless amphibian with a squat body, moist smooth skin, and long hind legs for jumping; about 70 mm long; brown or olive-green; develops from tadpole; Rana esculenta (Edible frog) or Rana punctata (Spotted frog) In this only reference to frogs in the NT, the connotation is of something unclean and abhorrent. In a number of societies, however, frogs are regarded as very valuable and worthwhile animals, since they are often an important source of food. On the other hand, in such areas there are usually certain types of frogs or toads which are particularly poisonous and whose names, therefore, do carry bad connotations.

33.88 · Communication · Speak, Talk to babble to utter senseless sounds or to speak indistinctly and incoherently For another interpretation of βατταλογέω in MAT 6:7, see βατταλογέω[a] 33.88.

In some languages the equivalent of ‘to babble’ is ‘to speak like a baby’ or ‘to speak sounds that make no sense.’

MAT 6:7¹

¹ MAT 6:7 βατταλογέω in the sense of ‘to babble’ or ‘to utter senseless sounds’ is treated in 33.89. The justification for βατταλογέω in the sense of ‘to speak much’ is probably to be found in the context of MAT 6:7, where the term πολυλογία (33.87) appears to be an explanation of the meaning of βατταλογέω.

Collocation: τὸ βδέλυγμα τῆς ἐρημώσεως

an abomination which desolates, a horrible thing which defiles (a fixed phrase derived from Hebrew, literally: the detestable thing of desolation) an abomination (either an object or an event) which defiles a holy place and thus causes it to be abandoned and left desolate In translating βδέλυγμα, it may be necessary in some languages to use a phrase such as ‘that which God detests’ or ‘that which God hates’ or even ‘that which causes God’s anger.’ The term ἐρημώσεως may then be translated as ‘that which causes people to abandon’ or ‘that which causes something to be deserted.’ The entire phrase may then be translated in some languages as ‘that which God detests and which causes something to be abandoned’ or ‘... left desolate.’

to make unclean, to defile, to profane to cause something to become unclean, profane, or ritually unacceptable¹ In a number of languages it is quite impossible to translate literally the concept of ‘unclean,’ for physical cleanliness and ritual acceptability are completely unrelated. In some languages it is necessary to translate κοινόω[a] or βεβηλόω as ‘to take away its holiness’ or ‘to make something unacceptable to God.’ In many cultures one must express this concept as involving so-called negative taboo.

judgement seat, judgment place a raised platform mounted by steps and usually furnished with a seat; used by officials to address an assembly, often on judicial matters, with a focus on judgement The association of a βῆμα with judicial procedures means that there is almost always an important component of judicial function associated with this term. Therefore in translating βῆμα, it is often best to use a phrase such as ‘a place where a judge decides’ or ‘a place where decisions are made’ or ‘a judge’s seat.’ The focus upon judgment is particularly important in those passages which refer to the judgment seat of God (ROM 14:10) and of Christ (2CO 5:10).

¹ ACT 7:5 Despite certain differences in size, in some languages the closest natural equivalent of the phrase βῆμα ποδός is simply ‘a square foot,’ while in other languages employing the metric system, a phrase such as ‘a square meter’ would be more appropriate. Some languages, however, may employ expressions such as ‘the measure of an arm’s length’ or ‘the ground of one stride.’ The focal point in ACT 7:5 is not so much the specific measurement, but rather the very limited space.

20.10 · (βιάζομαι[b]) · Violence, Harm, Destroy, Kill · Violence to use violence to employ violence in doing harm to someone or something Since there are a number of different interpretations of this expression (πᾶς εἰς αὐτήν βιάζεται) in LUK 16:16 as well as for the parallel expression in MAT 11:12 (ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν βιάζεται; see βιάζω[a]); it is important to consult various commentaries before undertaking a translation. Probably the most widely held interpretation of these difficult expressions is based on the fact that many people did not hesitate to employ violence or military force in order to establish what they regarded as the rule of God on earth.

¹ By setting up certain highly generic meanings for βλαστάνω, δίδωμι, ἀποδίδωμι, and ποιέω, it would be possible to treat the phrase compounds in this series as being semantically endocentric. However, it seems more satisfactory to regard them as what might be called low-grade idioms with specialized meanings of the semantically head expressions.

to feed, to cause to eat to cause animals to eat, particularly pasturing animals It is possible to interpret βόσκω in JHN 21:15 as meaning ‘to tend’ or ‘to take care of,’ especially since βόσκω occurs in a figurative context referring to people. Such an interpretation may be classified in Domain 35 Help, Care For Subdomain D Care For, Take Care Of, as a figurative meaning. 3.38 · Plants · Fruit Parts of Plants grape, bunch of grapes the small round fruit, sweet and juicy, of a creeping plant that develops a woody stem when it matures; Vitis vinifera; symbol of blessing, prosperity, and happiness Some scholars have contended that βότρυς means primarily a bunch of grapes, while σταφυλή designates individual grapes. In REV 14:18 this difference might seem plausible, but there is scarcely any evidence for such a distinction, since both words may signify grapes as well as bunches of grapes.

In some languages it is necessary to borrow a term for ‘grapes’ from a dominant language and then employ some kind of classifier, for example, ‘fruit called grapes.’ In other languages grapes may be known as ‘wine fruit,’ since wine may be more widely known than a term for grapes.

However, HEB 2:8 suggests that the writer of Hebrews probably interpreted βραχύ as meaning a small quantity (see 59.14) and as referring to time in the sense of ‘a little (while).’ For this interpretation of τι, see 92.12.

¹ The series of expressions indicating relative shortness of time may very well differ slightly, at least in connotative meaning, but on the basis of existing NT contexts it is not possible to determine significant denotative differences. The phrases in this series may be technically regarded as idioms, but functionally they are better classed as frozen phrases, which act essentially like morphological units.

14.10 · Physical Events and States · Rain

rain, to rain rain, whether light or torrential Though most languages have a general term for rain, the event of raining is more frequently referred to by a verb rather than by a noun, since rain is something which takes place and is not regarded as a thing or mass, unless, of course, one is referring to the water which comes down as rain, that is to say, 'rain water' (see 2.10). In some languages the event of raining is generally expressed idiomatically as 'God is urinating.' This might appear unduly crude and anthropomorphic, but to the speakers of such a language the expression is often quite acceptable and has no undesirable connotations.

Though in English one may use an impersonal subject with the verb 'to rain,' for example, 'it is raining,' many languages require some kind of personal agent, for example, ‘God is raining,’ or an impersonal agent such as ‘the sky is raining’ or ‘the clouds are raining.’

to send rain, to cause it to rain to cause rain to fall In a number of languages one cannot say literally ‘to send rain,’ for this would seem to imply that someone was carrying the rain to some destination. It may be more appropriate, therefore, to speak of ‘causing rain to fall’ or ‘causing rain to come down.’ It may be necessary, however, in some languages to indicate whether the occurrence of rain is for the detriment or the benefit of persons involved, and therefore it may be necessary to say in some instances ‘to cause rain to come down upon for the benefit of’; otherwise the reader might infer that the rain was some kind of punishment.

It may be important, however, to suggest the significance of this symbolic action, namely, 'gnashing their teeth in suffering' or 'to of suffer so much as to gnash the teeth.' As in the case of ACT 7:54, it is important to avoid an expression for 'gnashing the teeth' which will suggest 'gritting the teeth' in the sense of determination or courageous resistance.

to grind the teeth, to gnash the teeth, gnashing of teeth the grinding or the gnashing of the teeth, whether involuntary as in the case of certain illnesses, or as an expression of an emotion such as anger or of pain and suffering In translating 'they ground their teeth at him' (ACT 7:54) it may be necessary to indicate the type of emotion which is involved in such an action, for example, 'in anger they ground their teeth at him' or 'they showed their anger by grinding their teeth.' It is essential to avoid an expression such as 'to grit the teeth,' which in English is a symbol of determination, not of anger.

¹ ACT 7:54 It is possible to interpret the phrase βρύχω τοὺς ὀδόντας as being simply an idiom meaning ‘to show anger against,’ but the context suggests that the persons actually did grind their teeth as a symbol of their anger. See also 88.184.

5.1 · Foods and Condiments · Food food any kind of food or nourishment¹ Almost all languages have at least a few general terms for food, though these may be derived from verbal expressions meaning essentially ‘that which is eaten.’ In some instances a distinction may be made between ‘that which is chewed’ and ‘that which is drunk,’ and it may therefore be important in certain contexts to speak of food in general by a phrase meaning ‘that which is either chewed or drunk.’ If one fails to include both types of food, the reader might interpret a passage such as MAT 6:11 as requesting only solid foods.

In the place of a general term or phrase such as ‘that which is eaten’ or ‘that which is consumed,’ some languages generalize the meaning of a particular term. For example, in certain parts of the Orient the term meaning specifically ‘rice’ also refers to ‘food’ in general. In fact, some persons will declare, ‘I have not eaten!’ if they have not had rice as part of a meal. A similar type of meaning has developed in English with respect to ‘bread.’ For example, in rendering LUK 4:4 (οὐκ ἐπ’ ἄρτι μόνῳ ζήσεται ὁ ἄνθρωπος ‘man shall not live by bread alone’) it would be wrong to employ a strictly literal rendering, since this might mean simply that people should not live on a diet consisting solely of bread. The meaning of LUK 4:4 is, of course, ‘to live means more than merely eating.’

Languages may also use different terms in speaking of different areas of the sea or ocean. Note, for example, in English the use of China Sea, North Sea, Bering Sea, in contrast with Indian Ocean, Pacific Ocean, Atlantic Ocean.
