to drink water In a number of languages ‘to drink water’ is expressed by a single term which combines the components of drinking and of water. In other instances a verb meaning simply ‘to drink’ normally means to drink water unless otherwise specified. In Greek almost the opposite situation exists. For example, MAT 11:18 (ἦλθεν γὰρ Ἰωάννης μήτε ἐσθίων μήτε πίνων ‘for John came neither eating nor drinking’) implies a reference to drinking alcoholic beverages.

ὕδωρ (G5204)

noun, n. | ὕδατος | ἄνυδρος · ὕγρὸς · ὕδρῖα · ὕδροΠοτέω · ὕδρωΠικός · ὑετός

2.7 · Natural Substances · Water

water a clear liquid that is without color, taste, or smell in its pure form; it forms rivers, lakes, and oceans, and sustains life on earth In 2PE 3:5 the Greek expression is admittedly both strange and obscure. ἐξ ὕδατος presumably refers to the fact that the land emerged from the water, or at least was separated from the water. The phrase δι ὕδατος, literally ‘through water,’ may be locative, that is to say, it may refer to a place, but it is more likely to have some reference to water as an instrument which contributed to the act of producing the heavens and earth. However, the active instrument for this creation was τῷ τοῦ θεοῦ λόγῳ ‘the word of God.’ Since the dative case ὕδατι ‘by water’ is clearly instrumental in verse 6, it may be that ἐξ ὕδατος καὶ δι ὕδατος in verse 5 refers in a spacial sense to the formation of the heavens and the dry land ‘from water and through a watery area.’

Even more complex, however, than the interpretation of ‘water’ in 2PE 3:5 is the fact that in a number of languages there are quite different terms for ὕδωρ depending upon the type of water, its location, and its function. For example, water in some kind of bowl or container (and thus most likely used for drinking or cooking) may be referred to by one term, while water in a lake, stream, or ocean may be identified by quite a different term. Similarly, an important distinction may be made between salt water and fresh water, and an even further distinction may be introduced in the case of brackish water, that is to say, water which is partially salty. Some languages make a distinction between water which collects in pools and water which is flowing in streams or rivers. Accordingly, careful attention must be paid to contexts in order to select the appropriate term for ὕδωρ (see also 8.64 on JHN 19:34).

ὑετός

ὑετός (G5205)

noun, m. | -οῦ | ὕδωρ

rain, rain water water that falls in drops condensed from water vapor in the atmosphere Though ὑετός, which means rain as a substance (for ‘the event of raining,’ see 14.10), generally occurs in contexts in which the focus is upon the ‘the event of raining,’ as supplied by a verb (for example, ACT 14:17; JAS 5:18; and REV 11:6), in HEB 6:7 the focus is clearly upon the substance. Though the Greek text of HEB 6:7 speaks literally of the ground ‘drinking the rain,’ this figurative expression can rarely be reproduced. Sometimes one can use an expression such as ‘soaks up,’ the type of term which might be employed in speaking of a sponge soaking up moisture, but in a number of instances one can only speak of ‘the rain disappearing into the earth’ or ‘the earth causing the rain to disappear into it.’

Translators may be confronted with several problems in selecting an appropriate term for ‘rain,’ since some languages make important distinctions in terms for ‘rain’ depending upon the season of the year and the quantity of rain. For example, rain falling in the dry season may be called by quite a different term from that which falls in the rainy season. Similarly, a series of distinctions may be made in terms for rain depending upon whether one is speaking of a torrential rainstorm or an average rain or a continuous mist.

ACT 14:17 · HEB 6:7 · JAS 5:18 · REV 11:6

14.10 · Physical Events and States · Rain

rain, to rain rain, whether light or torrential Though most languages have a general term for rain, the event of raining is more frequently referred to by a verb rather than by a noun, since rain is something which takes place and is not regarded as a thing or mass, unless, of course, one is referring to the water which comes down as rain, that is to say, ‘rain water’ (see 2.10). In some languages the event of raining is generally expressed idiomatically as ‘God is urinating.’ This might appear unduly crude and anthropomorphic, but to the speakers of such a language the expression is often quite acceptable and has no undesirable connotations.

Though in English one may use an impersonal subject with the verb ‘to rain,’ for example, ‘it is raining,’ many languages require some kind of personal agent, for example, ‘God is raining,’ or an impersonal agent such as ‘the sky is raining’ or ‘the clouds are raining.’

In some instances a term such as ‘great grandson’ is generalized to mean any individual in the third or in any one of a number of succeeding generations. In place of a phrase such as ‘descendant of David,’ it is sometimes necessary to invert the expression to read ‘David was one of his ancestors.’

See also 9.4 and 12.15 In a number of languages it is difficult to speak of 'light' in the metaphorical sense of the truth that comes from God. Such truth is not to be equated with knowledge, but with the principles and practices of right moral behavior. Because of these difficulties in speaking of 'truth' as 'light,' a number of translators have preferred to use the expression 'people of God' for the phrases νιοὶ τοῦ φωτός, νιοὶ τῆς ἡμέρας, and τέκνα φωτός. In some instances, however, it is possible to employ 'light,' if this is described as 'light that comes from God' or even 'the true light from God.'

Though there are two expressions, νιοὶ φωτός and νιοὶ ἡμέρας, in 1TH 5:5, there does not seem to be any significant difference in meaning. The two phrases simply supplement and reinforce each other.

Collocation: υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου

Son of Man a title with Messianic implications used by Jesus concerning himself This title ‘Son of Man’ served not only to affirm but also to hide Christ’s Messianic role.

In a number of languages there are serious complications involved in a literal translation of υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ‘Son of Man.’ In the first place, this is likely to be understood in a more or less literal sense of ‘son of a man’ and thus a denial of the virgin birth. Such is particularly true in languages which have two words for ‘son,’ one meaning ‘son of a man’ and the other, ‘son of a woman.’ Under such circumstances, a literal translation would be a clear denial of the virgin birth.

Son of God (a title applied to Jesus, literally: son of God; parallel in semantic structure to phrases consisting of υἱός followed by the genitive of class or kind; compare 9.4) one who has the essential characteristics and nature of God Before adopting a translation of υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ such as ‘Son of God,’ one must always investigate the extent to which such an expression might already be used in a particular language. For example, in the Tarahumara language of Mexico mankind is divided into two classes: (1) ‘sons of God,’ who are Tarahumaras and (2) ‘sons of the devil,’ all other people. In these circumstances it is necessary in translating υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ to use an expression which will identify ‘the unique Son of God’ or ‘the one who is truly the Son of God.’

<sup>1</sup> The shift of meaning from υἱός[a] son (10.42) to υἱός[c] male descendant bears an interesting shift in the distinctive feature of generational succession, for in the case of υἱός[a] the denotation is of one who is one following generation removed from the reference person, while in the case of υἱός[c] the individual is several generations separated from the reference person.

forest a dense growth of trees covering a relatively large area In JAS 3:5 it is also possible to interpret ῥλη as wood which has been cut up, either firewood or wood used for construction (see ῥλη[b] wood, pile of wood, 3.64). In some languages spoken by people living in tropical forest areas the equivalent of 'forest' is simply the expression 'where no one lives,' based upon the fact that people live in clearings and everything else is forest. Such a rendering, however, may not lead to a satisfactory translation of JAS 3:5 (the only occurrence of ῥλη in the NT), in which case one is better advised to interpret ῥλη in the sense of 'pile of wood' (3.64).

JAS 3:5

3.64 · Plants · Wood and Wood Products

wood, pile of wood the woody part of trees or bushes In JAS 3:5 ῥλη may be interpreted as a forest (see 3.3). As already noted in the case of ξύλον[a] (3.60), a number of languages make a distinction between wood used as building material and wood employed in heating or cooking.

ὑπερβάλλω

ὑπερβάλλω (G5235)

verb | βάλλω

78.33 · Degree · More Than, Less Than [Comparative Degree]

extraordinary, extreme, supreme, far more, much greater, to a far greater degree a degree which exceeds extraordinarily a point on an implied or overt scale of extent<sup>1</sup> There are obviously a number of problems involved in attempting to render an expression of extraordinary degree, but it is sometimes possible to express such a degree by building up a series of intensive markers. For example, in EPH 2:7 one might translate τὸ ὑπερβάλλον πλοῦτος τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ as ‘his very, very great grace,’ and in 2CO 4:7 one might render ἡ ὑπερβολὴ τῆς δυνάμεως τοῦ θεοῦ as ‘God has very, very great power.’ Such expressions, however, may not do full justice to the intensity of degree expressed in ὑπερβάλλω and ὑπερβολή, since in a number of languages the closest equivalent might be something involving figurative meanings. For example, τὸ ὑπερβάλλον πλοῦτος τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ in EPH 2:7 might be rendered as ‘he is gracious beyond anything we can imagine,’ and in 2CO 4:7 ἡ ὑπερβολὴ τῆς δυνάμεως ἧ τοῦ θεοῦ may be rendered as ‘God has power beyond any words to describe.’

In this expression in EPH 2:7, both ὑπερβάλλον and πλοῦτος (78.15) serve as expressions of degree; ὑπερβάλλον indicates an implied comparison, while πλοῦτος suggests not only a high degree of something, but also value.

servant (derivative of ὑπηρετέω[a] ‘to serve,’ 35.19) a person who renders service In rendering θεραπῶν, ὑπηρετής, and διάκονος[a] in the sense of ‘servant,’ it is important to avoid a term which would be too specific, for example, ‘one who serves meals’ or ‘one who works around the house.’ It may, in fact, be necessary to use an expression which means essentially ‘helper.’

In the NT ὑπηρετής is employed to refer to many diverse types of servants, such as attendants to a king, officers of the Sanhedrin, attendants of magistrates, and, especially in the Gospel of John, Jewish Temple guards.

to make known, to demonstrate, to show to make known the character or significance of something by visual, auditory, gestural, or linguistic means<sup>1</sup> In some languages it may be useful to translate ὑποδείκνυμι in ACT 20:35 as 'I showed you by example' or 'I demonstrated by example' or 'I showed you by what I did.'

LUK 10:38 · LUK 19:6 · ACT 17:7 · JAS 2:25

<sup>1</sup> There are no doubt certain contextual constraints involved in the choice of ἀναδέχομαι[a], ἀποδέχομαι[a], ἐπιδέχομαι[a], εἰσδέχομαι, ὑποδέχομαι, προσδέχομαι[b], and παραδέχομαι[b] in the sense that the spacial relationships involved in the welcoming of a guest can be reflected in the prepositional prefixes. For example, in LUK 8:40 the use of ἀποδέχομαι may focus upon the particular source, while ἐπιδέχομαι in 3JN 1:10 may be relevant in view of the fact that the believers are coming to a particular point. προσδέχομαι in LUK 15:2 may suggest a kind of reciprocal relationship which is established with outcasts, and παραδέχομαι in ACT 15:4 may simply point to spacial proximity. However, it would be wrong to insist upon clear distinctions in meaning based on the very limited number of contexts involved. Some of these same distinctions in spacial relations may exist for the set προσλαμβάνω[e], παραλαμβάνω[d], ἀπολαμβάνω[d].

hyssop small aromatic bush with a shrub-like base and stems which are stiff, many-branched, hairy, and strong, 50–80 cm tall; Origanum syriacum or Majorana syriaca; used by the Jews in the ritual purification process as a sprinkling brush The hyssop bush may reach a height of one meter (three feet) and has a number of woody stems. In some translations a term for ‘hyssop’ is borrowed with a classifier such as ‘plant,’ for example, ‘a branch of a plant called hyssop.’

In JHN 19:29 some translators have simply used ‘a twig’ or ‘a branch,’ but this may not be adequate, since some persons see a good deal of symbolism in the use of the term ‘hyssop’ because of its relationship to ritual uses in the OT.

According to an old conjecture, the text of JHN 19:29 could have contained the term ὕσσός ‘javelin’ (6.35) rather than ὕσσωπος ‘hyssop’ (this reading is actually found in one eleventh century minuscule manuscript), and this has been followed by the NEB translation (“they soaked a sponge with the wine, fixed it on a javelin ...”), but this form of the text has very little support and is not recommended.

ὑψιστος (G5310)

adjc. | -η, -ον | ὑψόω

high, world above, sky, heaven, on high a location above the earth and associated with supernatural events or beings The parallelism in the phrases peace in heaven and glory in the world above indicates quite clearly the equivalence in reference, though not in meaning, between οὐρανός[b] (1.11) and ὑψιστος[a].

In MAT 21:9 the phrase ὡσαννά ἐν τοῖς ὑψίστοις, literally ‘hosanna in the highest,’ has been interpreted as a plea for salvation or deliverance from God who is in heaven. However, it seems preferable to understand ὡσαννά as simply being a shout of exclamation or praise and therefore to interpret the phrase ὡσαννά ἐν τοῖς ὑψίστοις as meaning ‘praise to God.’ In LUK 19:38 a parallel expression, καὶ δόξα ἐν ὑψίστοις, literally ‘and glory in the highest,’ is usually understood as an acclamation of glory to God and therefore may be so rendered. See 33.357.

In contexts in which these expressions refer clearly to ‘heaven’ or ‘the sky,’ it is better to use terms meaning ‘heaven’ or ‘sky’ rather than terms meaning ‘height’ or ‘that which is high.’

high, world above, sky, heaven, on high a location above the earth and associated with supernatural events or beings In LUK 24:49 ὑψος refers to heaven as a type of substitute reference for God, and in many languages it is advisable to translate ‘until the power from God comes down on you.’ In EPH 4:8 the phrase ἀναβὰς εἰς ὑψος

may be rendered literally as ‘when he went up to the heights,’ but it is preferable in a number of languages to translate ‘when he went up to heaven,’ for a literal rendering of ‘heights’ might imply only a high building or a mountain.

Collocation: ἀνατολή ἐξ ὕψους

the dawn from on high (an idiom, literally: dawning from on high) the bright dawn of salvation (or possibly to be understood as a title for the Messiah) The expression ἀνατολή ἐξ ὕψους occurs in a highly poetic liturgical passage in Luke 1, and many translators have preferred to retain the more or less literal rendering. Others, however, have interpreted this as the dawning of salvation and have therefore translated ἐπισκέπεται ἡμᾶς ἀνατολή ἐξ ὕψους as ‘salvation will dawn upon us from heaven’ or ‘from heaven salvation will come to us as the dawn does.’ If one wishes to employ ἀνατολή ἐξ ὕψους as simply a title for the Messiah, one can translate ‘the Messiah will come to us,’ but it is normally better to preserve the figurative expression and relate it to the coming of the Messiah as ‘the Messiah will come to us even as the dawn does from on high.’ One may also treat the problem of interpretation in a footnote.

high, world above, sky, heaven, on high a location above the earth and associated with supernatural events or beings There are differences of scholarly opinion as to whether ὑψωμα in ROM 8:39 is to be understood as a
