φάγος (G5314)

noun, m. | -ου | προσφάγιον

23.19 · Physiological Processes and States · Eat, Drink

glutton (derivative of the stem φαγ- ‘to eat,’ the aorist of ἐσθίω[a], 23.1) a person who habitually eats excessively A glutton is often spoken of idiomatically, for example, ‘a large belly’ or ‘a person who is only a stomach’ or ‘a professional eater.’

φαιλόνης (G5341a)

noun, m. | -ου

6.172 · Artifacts · Cloth, Leather, and Objects Made of Such Materials

cloak, coat, robe any type of outer garment¹ The choice of an equivalent for these terms relating to ‘outer garments’ will depend largely upon the specific context and the usage in each receptor language. The most common equivalent is a term meaning ‘coat.’

2TI 4:13

to shine, to give light, to bring light to shine or to produce light, as in the case of heavenly bodies, lightning, candles, torches, etc. Terms for ‘shining, giving light’ often differ depending upon the type of source. There may be, for example, a contrast between the shining of a heavenly body in contrast with some source on earth. There may also be a difference between a continuous shining such as of the sun and the moon and a brief flash, as in the case of lightning or sparks from a fire.

12.42 · Supernatural Beings and Powers · Supernatural Beings

ghost an apparition Most languages have quite satisfactory terms for ‘ghosts’ or ‘apparitions,’ since the psychological phenomena associated with such appearances are apparently universal. In some languages the equivalent of ‘ghost’ is simply ‘shadow.’ In other instances it may be literally ‘breath.’ In some instances the meaning of ‘ghost’ is incorporated within a verb expression, for example, ‘they saw, as it were, through him.’

The NT contains a number of lexical items (12.43-12.47) referring to supernatural powers believed to be active as elemental spirits exercising control over man’s fate. Though these may have certain special features associated with them and though in extrabiblical literature they may represent various grades of supernatural power, there seems to be no way in which they can be clearly distinguished on the basis of their NT usage. Appropriate equivalent expressions in other languages are extremely difficult to find, primarily because other religious systems usually have completely different beliefs relative to supernatural powers. In many languages it is simply not possible to speak of such supernatural powers without in some way identifying them with various kinds of spirits.

11.49 · Groups and Classes of Persons and Members of Such Groups and Classes · Socio-Religious

Pharisee a member of an important religious and political Jewish party at the time of Jesus and the apostles. The Pharisees constituted a significantly larger group than the Sadducees (see 11.48) and differed with them on certain doctrines and patterns of behavior. The Pharisees were strict and jealous adherents to the laws of the OT and to numerous additional traditions Translators have generally found it both wise and necessary to simply transliterate in one form or another Σαδδουκαῖος (11.48) and Φαρισαῖος, but some background information concerning these two parties is particularly important in a glossary; otherwise, certain passages of Scripture become extremely difficult to understand satisfactorily.

feed box, manger, crib a box or crib where animals feed (or possibly even an open feeding place under the sky) φάτνη[a] occurs only in LUK 2:7, and it may be important in some languages to distinguish clearly between various alternatives. The term ‘crib’ normally refers to the place where an animal stands when it feeds. The ‘manger’ is a relatively large box or rack containing hay, and a ‘feed box’ is a much smaller container, usually for grain. There is, of course, no way of knowing precisely where the baby Jesus was placed, but it would be very appropriate for the baby to have been placed in the feed box or in the manger. noun, n. | -ους

light light, in contrast with darkness (σκότος[a], σκοτία[a], 14.53), usually in relationship to some source of light such as the sun, moon, fire, lamp, etc.¹ Terms for 'light' often differ on the basis of whether there is a specific source of light, for example, a fire, lamps, sun, moon, etc., or whether the light is simply generalized, in the sense of daylight apart from the actual shining of the sun (for example, as in the interior of a room). Some languages also make distinctions between terms for light depending on whether the light comes from a fire or lamp or from a heavenly body.

In a number of languages there is no noun for 'light,' but only verbs are employed, since the fact of light is spoken of as something which happens and is hence regarded as an event.

MAT 24:29 · MRK 13:24

¹ It is possible that there is some contrast between φῶς[a] and φέγγος in that φῶς may suggest a somewhat stronger source of light, since φῶς is so frequently associated with the light of the sun while φέγγος is typically related to the light of the moon. In contexts outside the Scriptures there are, however, a number of instances in which there seems to be considerable overlapping of meaning.

In some languages, the concept of ‘leading’ can be expressed by ‘showing how to’ or ‘demonstrating how one ought to.’ In other languages it is possible to speak of ‘leading’ as simply ‘going ahead of,’ but too often such an expression may designate only ‘a scout’ who goes ahead to see whether things are safe, or it may refer only to a person who insists on his prerogative as the most distinguished person in a group.

15.11 · (φέρομαι[a]) · Linear Movement · Move, Come/Go to move, to come, to blow to move from one place to another, with the possible implication of causing the movement of some other object or objects It is possible that in ACT 2:2 φέρομαι should be understood in an idiomatic sense of ‘blowing,’ since it is combined with the noun for ‘wind’ (πνοή[a], 14.4). In any event, one must often translate φέρομαι[a] as ‘blowing,’ since this is frequently the appropriate type of term to use in speaking of the movement of wind.

13.58 · (φέρομαι[b]) · Be, Become, Exist, Happen · Change of State to change to, to move on to, to progress (a figurative extension of meaning of φέρομαι[a] ‘to move from one place to another,’ 15.11) to change from one state to another, with the implication of progressive development

HEB 6:1

¹ JHN 20:27 · JHN 20:27 It is possible that the occurrence of φέρω in JHN 20:27 JHN 20:27 should be classified merely as an instance of ‘bringing’ or ‘carrying,’ but the focus seems to be far more upon placement at a particular location. The element of movement appears to be entirely secondary.

REV 16:20

to kiss to kiss, either as an expression of greeting or as a sign of special affection and appreciation¹ Since in so many societies kissing is not a form of greeting, it may be necessary to add some kind of classifier to contexts such as MAT 26:48 and MAT 26:49 in order to indicate clearly the intention involved; otherwise, the use of a term meaning merely 'to kiss' might suggest a kind of erotic display. The clause in MAT 26:49 may be translated as 'the man I greet by kissing is the one you want.'

MAT 26:48 · MRK 14:44 · LUK 22:47

¹ Though the act of kissing may have different functions, the nature of the event is essentially the same. In some languages, however, a distinction is made between kissing on the cheek and kissing on the lips. Additional distinctions may be made as to whether one is kissing a person of the same sex or of a different sex.

to fear, to show great reverence for, to show great respect for to have such awe or respect for a person as to involve a measure of fear In a number of languages there are serious problems involved in speaking of ‘fearing God,’ for this might imply merely ‘to be scared of God’ as though God were some kind of bogeyman. If there is a term with the meaning of ‘awe’ (perhaps in a phrase such as ‘to stand in awe of’), this may be an adequate equivalent. fear a state of severe distress, aroused by intense concern for impending pain, danger, evil, etc., or possibly by the illusion of such circumstances In a number of languages there is no noun-like word for 'fear.' Accordingly, expressions containing such a noun in Greek must often be restructured so that the corresponding semantic unit may be expressed by a verb. Therefore, instead of 'fear,' one may have expressions such as 'be afraid' or 'to fear.' Instead of 'fears within' (2CO 7:5), one may translate 'in our hearts we were afraid.'

JHN 12:13 · REV 7:9

3.53 · Plants · Non-Fruit Parts of Plants

palm branch branch of the palm tree (φοῖνιξ¹) βᾶϊον is a technical term meaning ‘palm branch,’ and in JHN 12:13 τῶν φοινίκων ‘of palm trees’ may have been added redundantly, since the term βᾶϊον may not have been regarded as sufficiently well known to readers.

In the contexts in which φοῖνιξ[a] (JHN 12:13; see 3.8) and φοῖνιξ[b] (REV 7:9) occur in the NT, it is important to obtain a satisfactory term for branch, since in a number of languages a very important distinction is made between branches of palm trees, which are often called leaves (technically they are), and branches of most other trees (often spoken of idiomatically as arms of the trees).

REV 7:9

¹ Though in English it is generally the custom to speak of what in Greek is βᾶϊον or φοῖνιξ (3.53) as a palm branch, technically it is only a very large leaf, for there are no buds on these so-called branches.

7.59 · Constructions · Walls and Fences fence, wall a structure for enclosing an open area In practically all societies there is some type of fence, wall, or barrier employed to surround fields. In some instances this may consist of piled up logs or sticks; in other instances the wall may be made of packed dirt or of laid-up stone. What is important, however, is not the form, but the function, and therefore one may often use a descriptive expression, for example, ‘a barrier to surround a field,’ sometimes described as ‘a barrier to keep animals out of the field.’

φραγμός[a] is also used figuratively of the Law, which constituted a barrier between Jews and Gentiles: τὸ μεσότοιχον τοῦ φραγμοῦ ‘a wall of separation’ or ‘barrier’ EPH 2:14. In EPH 2:14 φραγμός[a] may be rendered as ‘a wall to keep apart’ or ‘a wall to divide’ (see 34.39).

φρίσσω

φρίσσω (G5425)

verb

25.260 · Attitudes and Emotions · Fear, Terror, Alarm

to shudder with fear, to be extremely afraid to be so afraid as to shudder or tremble¹

JAS 2:19

to have an attitude, to think in a particular manner (derivative of the base φρον ‘thoughtful planning,’ 26.15) to employ one’s faculty for thoughtful planning, with emphasis upon the underlying disposition or attitude In some instances it may be appropriate to render PHP 2:5 as ‘you should think the way Christ Jesus did’ or ‘how Jesus Christ thought about things is the way you should think about them’ (in which a term meaning ‘things’ would refer to events and not simply to material objects).

It is also possible to understand φρονέω in PHP 2:5 as referring specifically to the attitude of people to one another.

φυλή (G5443)

noun, f. | -ῆς | φύω

10.2 · Kinship Terms · Groups and Members of Groups of Persons Regarded as Related by Blood but without Special Reference to Successive Generations tribe a subgroup of a nation which is regarded as being more closely related biologically than the entire nation In a number of societies there are only three well-defined biologically related groups: (1) the nuclear family (that is to say, the immediate family); (2) the extended family (often referred to as ‘the clan’); and (3) the tribe or nation as a whole. Under such circumstances it may be necessary to speak of the twelve tribes of Israel as being ‘twelve large clans.’ This would emphasize their biological relationships and at the same time would suggest that they constituted part of a larger ethnic unit, namely, the nation. On the other hand, a number of so-called ‘primitive societies’ have a great many designations for different sets of biologically related persons. These may designate an individual family, an extended family, the clan, a grouping of clans, a division of a tribe into two interacting units (called moieties), and finally the tribe as a whole, equivalent in larger societies to a nation. The choice of appropriate terms for various groups of biologically related persons becomes particularly complex in certain passages in the OT.

φῶς

φῶς

φῶς (G5457)

noun, n. | φωτός | φαίνω

14.36 · Physical Events and States · Light

light light, in contrast with darkness (σκότος[a], σκοτία[a], 14.53), usually in relationship to some source of light such as the sun, moon, fire, lamp, etc.¹ Terms for ‘light’ often differ on the basis of whether there is a specific source of light, for example, a fire, lamps, sun, moon, etc., or whether the light is simply generalized, in the sense of daylight apart from the actual shining of the sun (for example, as in the interior of a room). Some languages also make distinctions between terms for light depending on whether the light comes from a fire or lamp or from a heavenly body.

In a number of languages there is no noun for ‘light,’ but only verbs are employed, since the fact of light is spoken of as something which happens and is hence regarded as an event.

2.5 · Natural Substances · Fire

fire, bonfire a pile or heap of burning material The Greek phrase ἄψαντες ... πυράν ‘to kindle a fire’ is best rendered in a number of languages by a single verb meaning ‘to make a fire,’ and in some languages it is strange to speak of a ‘fire’ without indicating the type of material which is being burned. Hence, in ACT 28:2 the appropriate equivalent would be ‘they caused some sticks to burn.’

In some languages a very important distinction is made between two functionally different kinds of fire, one used for getting rid of refuse and the other used for warming oneself. Fire as a destructive agent, mentioned frequently in the book of Revelation (REV 8:5 and REV 20:10), may require quite a different term from what is used in speaking of a fire for the purpose of warming a person or heating an object.

Collocation: υἱοὶ τοῦ φωτός · τέκνα φωτός

sons of the light, children of the light, people of God (idioms, literally: sons of the light, and: children of light, respectively) persons to whom the truth of God has been revealed and who are presumably living according to such truth. See also 9.4 and 12.15 In a number of languages it is difficult to speak of ‘light’ in the metaphorical sense of the truth that comes from God. Such truth is not to be equated with knowledge, but with the principles and practices of right moral behavior. Because of these difficulties in speaking of ‘truth’ as ‘light,’ a number of translators have preferred to use the expression ‘people of God’ for the phrases υἱοὶ τοῦ φωτός, υἱοὶ τῆς ἡμέρας, and τέκνα φωτός. In some instances, however, it is possible to employ ‘light,’ if this is described as ‘light that comes from God’ or even ‘the true light from God.’

MAT 10:27 · LUK 12:3

¹ It is possible that there is some contrast between φῶς[a] and φέγγος in that φῶς may suggest a somewhat stronger source of light, since φῶς is so frequently associated with the light of the sun while φέγγος is typically related to the light of the moon. In contexts outside the Scriptures there are, however, a number of instances in which there seems to be considerable overlapping of meaning. ² It is very possible that the two idioms in 28.64 differ somewhat in meaning, or at least in connotation, but it is difficult, if not impossible, to show this from existing contexts.

φωστήρ

φωστήρ

φωστήρ (G5458)

noun, m. | -ῆρος | φαίνω

1.27 · Geographical Objects and Features · Heavenly Bodies

light, luminary, star any light-producing object in the sky, such as the sun, moon, and other planets and stars Though φωστήρ[a] may refer to any light-producing object, it is used especially of the heavenly bodies and more specifically of stars, as in PHP 2:15, the one NT context in which φωστήρ[a] occurs. A focal component of this meaning is the light-giving characteristic.

PHP 2:15

14.49 · Physical Events and States · Light

brightness, shining, radiance the state of brightness or shining In a number of languages a clear distinction is made between some object which is bright in and of itself (that is to say, the source of brightness or radiance) and objects which are bright because they reflect light from some source. In the case of MAT 17:5 (which is generally regarded as a reference to the Shekinah presence of God), the cloud would not be merely reflecting light but would be a source of light (see 14.50).

φωσφόρος (G5459)

adjc. | -ου | φαίνω + φέρω

1.32 · Geographical Objects and Features · Heavenly Bodies

morning star a light-producing heavenly body, probably the morning star (a planet), but possibly the sun The literal meaning of φωσφόρος is ‘that which bears light,’ but it is a conventional reference to the morning star, which in reality is not a star, but one of the brighter planets, usually Venus, but also Jupiter, Mars, Mercury, or even Saturn. In the one occurrence of this word in the NT, namely, 2PE 1:19, φωσφόρος is an indirect figurative reference to Jesus and his redemptive work, but it is extremely difficult in a number of languages to speak of ‘the light of the morning star shining in your hearts.’ One may sometimes say ‘... shines upon your hearts’ or possibly ‘... shines upon you and causes you to have new hearts’ or ‘... and illumines your minds.’

14.51 · Physical Events and States · Light

full of light, well lighted pertaining to being well lighted In a number of languages one cannot speak of an object being ‘full of light,’ for light is not spoken of as a substance. It is, of course, normally possible to speak of something as ‘having light inside’ (for example, the occurrence of light within a room). However, rather than speaking positively of the occurrence of light, it is sometimes more satisfactory to indicate the absence of darkness, for example, ‘there was no darkness there’ or, as in MAT 6:22, ‘your whole body will have no darkness in it.’
