to be demon possessed (derivative of δαιμόνιον[a] ‘demon,’ 12.37) to be possessed by a demon In a number of languages one cannot speak of a person ‘being possessed by a demon.’ A more appropriate expression may be ‘the person possesses a demon.’ In other instances an idiomatic phrase is employed, ‘the demon rides the person’ or ‘the demon commands the person’ or even ‘the demon is the person.’

12.37 · Supernatural Beings and Powers · Supernatural Beings

demon, evil spirit an evil supernatural being or spirit While in a number of languages the Devil may be spoken of as ‘the chief of the demons,’ sometimes the demons are simply called ‘the spirits of the Devil’ or ‘the servants of the Devil.’

In a number of languages the difficulty in terminology for demons is not the absence of a term, but the abundance of different terms for different kinds of demons, each one of which may be responsible for particular kinds of human behavior, for example, insanity, depression, epilepsy, sex perversion, and violent assault. Sometimes demons are classified as ‘those of the home’ and ‘those of the forest,’ in which case the latter are normally regarded as more violent and virulent. When there is an abundance of different terms for demons and no generic term for all types of demons, one can usually select a class of demons which parallels most closely the descriptions of demon activity in the NT and use such a term with appropriate contextual qualifications so as to suggest that such a term is to be understood in a general sense.

δάκτυλος (G1147)

8.34 · Body, Body Parts, and Body Products · Parts of the Body

finger one of the five long and slender projections of the human hand, used for writing, pointing, grasping, and other activities Though it may seem quite logical to speak of 'writing with the finger' (JHN 8:6), in some languages one is required to speak of 'writing with the hand.' Similarly, in MAT 23:4 the idiom 'to lift a finger' is more satisfactorily expressed as 'to lift a hand.' Expressions such as 'to lift the hand' and 'to lift the finger' must be carefully studied for their idiomatic significance, for 'to lift the hand' may mean 'to release something,' while 'to lift the finger' may be a lewd gesture.

In a number of languages the expression 'to lift a finger' (MAT 23:4) may be best rendered as 'to do a thing to help' or 'to help in any way.' For δάκτυλος θεοῦ 'the finger of God' (LUK 11:20), see 76.3.

76.3 · Power, Force

power power as an expression of the activity of a person or supernatural being¹ In some languages there is no abstract term for 'power.' The equivalent of doing something by the power of someone is 'someone makes it possible to do' or, in a figurative sense, 'someone gives strength to do.'

LUK 11:20

¹ It is possible that χείρ[c], βραχίων, and δάκτυλος[b] in the figurative sense of power of an individual differ somewhat in meaning one from the other, but it is impossible to determine this on the basis of existing contexts.

verb | subj. δέη | inf. δεῖν · ptc. δέον · impf. ἔδει | δέω

71.34 · Mode · Necessary, Unnecessary to be necessary, must to be that which must necessarily take place, often with the implication of inevitability It is impossible to tell in a context such as MRK 13:7 whether δεῖ implies mere inevitability of an event or whether the events are somehow part of the plan and purpose of God. The latter interpretation could only be derived from broader theological implications and not from the meaning of δεῖ itself.

¹ It is possible that ὑποδείκνυμι[a] is somewhat more emphatic or intensive in connotation than δεικνυμι[a], but this cannot be shown from existing contexts. ² There may very well be a slight difference of meaning between δεικνυμι[b] and ὑποδείκνυμι[b], but this cannot be determined from existing contexts. ³ 1CO 12:31 The ‘more excellent way’ referred to in 1CO 12:31 consists of a verbal statement occurring in 1 Cor 13, so that in this context δεικνυμι refers to an oral communication, but the content of 1 Cor 13 involves far more than oral communication, so that in the context of 1CO 12:31, one is perfectly justified in analyzing the meaning as being essentially ‘causing to know.’ It is obviously very difficult to determine in the case of δεικνυμι[b] and ὑποδείκνυμι[b] whether the focus is upon the act of communication or upon the resulting knowledge or understanding of the receptors. The same type of difficulty occurs in the meanings listed in 33.151-33.154.

a meal, a banquet, a feast a meal whether simple or elaborate (this generic meaning of δειπνον is in contrast with the more specific meaning of δειπνον[b], 23.25) Though ἄριστον[a], δειπνον[a], and βρῶσις[b] are highly generic in this usage, it is not necessary to translate these terms by a corresponding generic term in another language, since a more specific term may fit the context more satisfactorily. In fact, a generic term might be quite inappropriate in that it would suggest in the case of MRK 6:21 that Herod was quite stingy in simply providing an ordinary meal for his officials.

supper, main meal the principal meal of the day, usually in the evening Though in the so-called Western world there is a tendency to have three meals each day, breakfast, lunch, and dinner (or supper), in many parts of the world there are only two principal meals: one eaten around nine or ten o'clock in the morning, and another at four or five o'clock in the afternoon.

In some languages there is a very important distinction made between a more or less formal meal and the relatively informal times of eating which might be called 'snacks.' These would be occasions on which one would eat only one kind of food and possibly in relatively small quantities.

¹ There may be some subtle distinction in meaning between δέχομαι[a] on the one hand and λαμβάνω[c] and λήμψις on the other, in that the latter set of meanings may imply more active participation on the part of the one who receives or takes the gift, but this cannot be determined from existing contexts. ² There are no doubt certain contextual constraints involved in the choice of ἀναδέχομαι[a], ἀποδέχομαι[a], ἐπιδέχομαι[a], εἰσδέχομαι, ὑποδέχομαι, προσδέχομαι[b], and παραδέχομαι[b] in the sense that the spacial relationships involved in the welcoming of a guest can be reflected in the prepositional prefixes. For example, in LUK 8:40 the use of ἀποδέχομαι may focus upon the particular source, while ἐπιδέχομαι in 3JN 1:10 may be relevant in view of the fact that the believers are coming to a particular point. προσδέχομαι in LUK 15:2 may suggest a kind of reciprocal relationship which is established with outcasts, and παραδέχομαι in ACT 15:4 may simply point to spacial proximity. However, it would be wrong to insist upon clear distinctions in meaning based on the very limited number of contexts involved. Some of these same distinctions in spacial relations may exist for the set προσλαμβάνω[e], παραλαμβάνω[d], ἀπολαμβάνω[d]. ³ LUK 22:17 It is possible that δέχομαι in LUK 22:17 may mean ‘to receive’ (see 57.125).

assembly, gathering a group of citizens assembled for socio-political activities It is possible that in ἐκκλησία[c] there is somewhat more focus upon the people being together as a legal assembly, while in the case of δῆμος the emphasis is merely upon a meeting of citizens. But in the NT one cannot distinguish clearly between the meanings of these two words.

ἐκκλησία[c] and δῆμος may be rendered in some languages as ‘a meeting of the people who belonged to that place’ or ‘... who were inhabitants of that town’ or ‘... whose homes were in that town.’

6.75 · Artifacts · Money and Monetary Units

denarius a Roman silver coin equivalent to a days wage of a common laborer The practice of translating terms for coins with specific monetary values has differed widely in different languages at different times and in different contexts. One of the most serious problems has been the recent rapid inflation which has taken place in many parts of the world and which has thus made traditional renderings relatively meaningless or even absurd. For a number of years the silver content in an ancient denarius was equivalent to twenty cents U.S., but the value of silver has changed appreciably within recent times, and therefore any calculation based upon the value of silver content in ancient coins is misleading. Furthermore, in ancient times silver coins had proportionately far more buying power than the equivalent amount of silver would have today. Therefore, a number of translators have attempted in some measure to relate coinage to buying power, or perhaps better, to earning power. For example, in MRK 6:37 the reference to ‘two hundred denarii’ is sometimes translated as ‘the equivalent of 200 days’ wages’ or even ‘eight months of a laborer’s wages.’

In MAT 18:28 the reference to ‘a hundred denarii’ is designed primarily to indicate the contrast between the enormous sum owed by one servant in contrast with the very small amount owed by the fellow servant. In this instance the contrast may be expressed in terms of ‘thousands of denarii’ in contrast with a ‘few denarii.’ In such a case the equivalent coinage may be turned into a local currency, for example, ‘thousands of dollars’ in contrast with a ‘few dollars.’ In a number of cases translators have attempted to avoid any specific reference to a particular coin and have simply spoken of ‘silver coins’ or ‘gold coins’ without indicating particular values. Under such circumstances a marginal note is sometimes employed in order to indicate the relative value of the currency.

For example, in 2CO 6:10 the fact of being glad may be related specifically to the occasions of being saddened, while in MAT 18:10 the focus of meaning is probably upon the continuous nature of the relation.

¹ There are probably certain subtle distinctions between the use of διὰ[c] in contrast with εἰς[h] or ἐν[p] as markers of means, but this cannot be clearly determined from existing contexts. ² MAT 8:28 It is possible to interpret διὰ in MAT 8:28 as being a blend of two meanings, namely, extension along a path and passage through an area (see 84.29). ³ The series of expressions indicating relative shortness of time may very well differ slightly, at least in connotative meaning, but on the basis of existing NT contexts it is not possible to determine significant denotative differences. The phrases in this series may be technically regarded as idioms, but functionally they are better classed as frozen phrases, which act essentially like morphological units.

διάβολος (G1228)

adjc. | -ον | βάλλω

12.34 · Supernatural Beings and Powers · Supernatural Beings

Devil, Satan (a title for the Devil, literally ‘slanderer’) the principal supernatural evil being¹ In a number of languages there is a well known proper name for the Devil as the chief of all demons. In other instances, however, he is given a descriptive name, for example, ‘the ruler of the evil spirits,’ ‘the chief of the demons,’ ‘the truly bad one,’ ‘the left-handed one’ (as the one who is opposed to all which is right or correct), ‘the no-good one,’ ‘the avaricious one.’ In some instances a term for the Devil may be highly idiomatic as, for example, ‘the barking one,’ a reference to the Devil’s presumed activity in animal guise.

Some translators have attempted to construct a term for Devil on the basis of the meaning of the Greek term διάβολος as ‘slanderer.’ This, however, has rarely been advisable, largely because in practically all languages there is a far more relevant way of speaking about the Devil. Other translators have attempted to render the term Devil by simply borrowing the form of the word from a dominant language, but this may also introduce complications, since one cannot always control the manner in which such a term will be understood. In one language, for example, the borrowed term ‘devil’ was identified simply as a small spirit that spreads fever among people, while in another area the borrowed term ended up meaning only a spirit which induces insanity. In this latter instance, the translators finally used an expression for the Devil which meant literally ‘the lord of all sin.’ Some translators have employed for ‘Devil’ the proper name Satan, but this is often not a satisfactory solution. In one language in West Africa, for example, the term Satan had already been borrowed but was understood in the sense of the culture hero of the people and not as a designation for the chief of demons.

demon, evil spirit an evil supernatural being or spirit While in a number of languages the Devil may be spoken of as ‘the chief of the demons,’ sometimes the demons are simply called ‘the spirits of the Devil’ or ‘the servants of the Devil.’

In a number of languages the difficulty in terminology for demons is not the absence of a term, but the abundance of different terms for different kinds of demons, each one of which may be responsible for particular kinds of human behavior, for example, insanity, depression, epilepsy, sex perversion, and violent assault. Sometimes demons are classified as ‘those of the home’ and ‘those of the forest,’ in which case the latter are normally regarded as more violent and virulent. When there is an abundance of different terms for demons and no generic term for all types of demons, one can usually select a class of demons which parallels most closely the descriptions of demon activity in the NT and use such a term with appropriate contextual qualifications so as to suggest that such a term is to be understood in a general sense.

¹ The terms διάβολος and Σατανᾶς appear to function both as titles and as proper names. This results from the fact that the referent in each instance is unique. In the text of the Greek NT Σατανᾶς was traditionally written with an initial capital letter, while διάβολος was normally written with a lower case initial letter, except for the occurrences of Διάβολος in REV 12:9 and REV 20:2.

covenant, pact the verbal content of an agreement between two persons specifying reciprocal benefits and responsibilities In LUK 1:72, ποιῆσαι ἔλεος μετὰ τῶν Πατέρων ἡμῶν καὶ μνησθῆναι διαθήκης ἀγίας αὐτοῦ '(God said he) would show mercy to our ancestors and remember his sacred covenant with them,' it is possible that διαθήκη denotes either the making of the covenant (34.43) or the verbal formulation (34.44).

In rendering the OT term brith, the Septuagint translators employed διαθήκη, literally ‘final will’ or ‘testament,’ in place of συνθήκη ‘contract,’ ‘agreement,’ since they evidently wished to emphasize the fact that the initiative for such a covenantal relationship existed with one person rather than being the result of negotiation and compromise.

In many societies, and particularly in tribal ones, a covenant is a very significant bond between persons. It may, in fact, be the most important and lasting interpersonal relationship. It is seldom entered into lightly, for in many societies a covenant binds a person for a lifetime and may even involve willingness to die for the sake of the covenantal relationship.

διακονία (G1248)

noun, f. | -ας | διακονέω

35.19 · Help, Care For · Serve

to serve, to render service, to help, service, help to render assistance or help by performing certain duties, often of a humble or menial nature In some languages it is essential in communicating the concept of ‘service’ to introduce a specific reference to ‘a servant,’ for example, ‘to help as a servant’ or ‘to assist as one who must,’ and in some contexts it may be useful to employ a phrase such as ‘to help in small things’ or ‘to do the low tasks.’ In rendering ‘your service’ in REV 2:19, it may be necessary to say ‘how you help others’ or ‘how you serve others.’

servant (derivative of διακονέω[a] ‘to serve,’ 35.19) a person who renders service In rendering θεράπων, ὑπηρετής, and διάκονος[a] in the sense of ‘servant,’ it is important to avoid a term which would be too specific, for example, ‘one who serves meals’ or ‘one who works around the house.’ It may, in fact, be necessary to use an expression which means essentially ‘helper.’

διακούω (G1251)

56.13 · Courts and Legal Procedures · Judicial Hearing, Inquiry

to hear a case, to provide a legal hearing, to hear a case in court to give a judicial hearing in a legal matter¹ In some languages the most satisfactory way of speaking about ‘a court hearing’ is to describe the relationship between the principal participants. This may sometimes be done by translating ‘for a judge to listen to an accuser and a defender.’

ACT 23:35

¹ ἀκούω[g] and διακούω apparently differ somewhat in meaning from ἀνακρίνω[b] (56.12) in that the former two seem to be more neutral in connotation and do not appear to imply later condemnation.

MAT 16:3 · 1CO 6:5 · 1CO 11:29 · 1CO 11:31 · 1CO 14:29

30.99 · Think · To Choose, To Select, To Prefer to prefer, to judge as superior, to regard as more valuable to judge something to be better than something else, and hence, to prefer Superiority is often expressed in terms of ‘being better,’ but in some languages it is designated by means of a phrase meaning ‘to surpass,’ so that the question in 1CO 4:7 may be rendered as ‘who judges that you surpass others?’

1CO 4:7

30.113 · Think · To Distinguish, To Evaluate, To Judge to make a distinction, to judge that there is a difference to judge that there is a difference or distinction In some languages it may be best to render this statement in ACT 15:9 as ‘he did not think that we and they are different.’

33.412 · (διακρίνομαι[c]) · Communication · Criticize to criticize to express disapproval of what someone has done It is possible to interpret the meaning of διακρίνομαι in ACT 11:2 as being merely adverse judgment, but since this judgment was clearly voiced, διακρίνομαι implies more than mere judgment. The direct expression of an adverse judgment may be best rendered in English as ‘to criticize.’

¹ The meanings of κρίνω[c] (30.108), ἀνακρίνω[d] and διακρίνω[a] (30.109) are all closely related to the process of learning and of understanding, and in some contexts the meanings shade one into the other.

33.485 · Communication · Non-Verbal Communication to gesture, to motion, to nod, to beckon to signal to someone by means of part of the body, especially by means of the head or hands¹ In a number of languages it is necessary to be quite specific with regard to types of gestures or motions of the head or hands and arms. For example, in JHN 13:24 there is an obvious question involved, and this may require in some languages a particular signal by means of the hands or face. The same would be true in the case of LUK 1:62. In LUK 1:22 the gesture would have to be something which would explain or indicate Zechariah’s inability to speak, while in LUK 5:7 quite another gesture would no doubt be called for, since the persons involved were at quite a distance from one another.

19.32 · Physical Impact · Split, Tear

to tear, to rip to tear or rip in two (as of clothing)¹ In the NT tearing of clothing was a symbol of horror associated with sacrilege. In many cultures, however, the tearing of clothing may be associated only with insanity. It may therefore be important to add a phrase in describing ‘the tearing of clothing’ in order to mark the significance, for example, ‘to show horror’ (MAT 26:65, ACT 14:14) and in the OT ‘to show mourning’ (GEN 37:34, JDG 11:35).

διατροφή

διατροφή (G1305)

noun, f. | -ῆς | τρέφω

5.1 · Foods and Condiments · Food

food any kind of food or nourishment¹ Almost all languages have at least a few general terms for food, though these may be derived from verbal expressions meaning essentially ‘that which is eaten.’ In some instances a distinction may be made between ‘that which is chewed’ and ‘that which is drunk,’ and it may therefore be important in certain contexts to speak of food in general by a phrase meaning ‘that which is either chewed or drunk.’ If one fails to include both types of food, the reader might interpret a passage such as MAT 6:11 as requesting only solid foods.

In the place of a general term or phrase such as ‘that which is eaten’ or ‘that which is consumed,’ some languages generalize the meaning of a particular term. For example, in certain parts of the Orient the term meaning specifically ‘rice’ also refers to ‘food’ in general. In fact, some persons will declare, ‘I have not eaten!’ if they have not had rice as part of a meal. A similar type of meaning has developed in English with respect to ‘bread.’ For example, in rendering LUK 4:4 (οὐκ ἐπ’ ἄρτω μόνῳ ζήσεται ὁ ἄνθρωπος ‘man shall not live by bread alone’) it would be wrong to employ a strictly literal rendering, since this might mean simply that people should not live on a diet consisting solely of bread. The meaning of LUK 4:4 is, of course, ‘to live means more than merely eating.’

¹ There are no doubt certain subtle differences of meaning in the various terms listed here as meaning ‘food,’ but it is impossible to determine such distinctions in meaning from NT contexts. Perhaps τροφή and διατροφή are somewhat more generic in meaning and may suggest a greater emphasis upon nourishment (see footnote b). At the same time, βρώσις[c] and βρώμα[a] may imply solid substantive food, but it is difficult, if not impossible, to argue for such subtle connotative distinctions in meanings which are essentially generic. ² 1TI 6:8 It is possible that τροφή and διατροφή focus primarily upon the meaning of food as nourishment, and in 1TI 6:8 and MAT 10:10 it would be perfectly appropriate to use a translation meaning ‘nourishment’ rather than merely ‘food.’

to teach, teaching to provide instruction in a formal or informal setting The equivalent of 'to teach' in many languages is simply a causative form of a verb meaning 'to learn' or 'to know,' for example, 'to cause to learn' or 'to cause to know.' In choosing a term for 'to teach' it is important to avoid an expression which will denote merely classroom activity.

¹ In this meaning δίδωμι serves primarily as a so-called empty verb. The event is to be found in the so-called object of the verb. ² δίδωμι seems to imply a benevolent purpose in the action of assigning someone to a role. ³ By setting up certain highly generic meanings for βλαστάνω, δίδωμι, ἀποδίδωμι, and ποιέω, it would be possible to treat the phrase compounds in this series as being semantically endocentric. However, it seems more satisfactory to regard them as what might be called low-grade idioms with specialized meanings of the semantically head expressions.

cross-currents two currents which meet in a body of water Other scholars, however, interpret διθάλασσος together with τόπος as being a reef, a sandbar, or even a headland (see 1.68).

Cross-currents may be spoken of as ‘streams in the sea’ or ‘rivers in the sea’ or ‘two rivers that meet in the sea.’ It would be wrong, however, to use the expression ‘two rivers that meet in the sea’ if this meant merely two rivers which meet at the coastline as they flow from the interior. In this context ‘rivers’ can only refer to ‘rivers of the sea,’ in other words, ‘currents.’

Collocation: τόπος διθάλασσος

sandbar, reef a bar or reef produced in an area where two currents meet It is possible to understand τόπος διθάλασσος in ACT 27:41 as a place of crosscurrents; see 14.32. In some languages it may be necessary to construct a descriptive equivalent for ‘sandbank,’ for example, ‘a hill of sand just beneath the surface of the water’ or ‘a ridge of sand hidden by the water.’

putting right with, causing to be in a right relationship with causing someone to be in a proper or right relation with someone else Some scholars, however, interpret δικαιοῶ, δικαίωσις, and δικαιοσύνη in the following contexts as meaning forensic righteousness, that is to say, the act of being declared righteous on the basis of Christ's atoning ministry; but it would seem more probable that Paul uses these expressions in the context of the covenant relation rather than in the context of legal procedures.

It may be difficult in some languages to find a succinct expression equivalent to 'to be put right with.' Sometimes the closest equivalent may be 'to be related to as one should be.' In some instances the implication of a right relationship may be expressed by phrases involving 'acceptance.' For example, ROM 3:24 may be expressed as 'by the free gift of God's grace they are accepted by him through Christ Jesus who sets them free.' Similarly, ROM 4:25 is sometimes expressed as 'he was raised to life in order to cause us to be accepted by God.' There are, however, certain dangers involved in terms indicating ‘acceptance,’ since this might imply God’s reluctance to accept people apart from the atoning work of Jesus Christ, while in reality it was God who was in Christ reconciling the world to himself. Therefore, one should clearly avoid a rendering which would seem to suggest different types of motivation in the Godhead.

Some scholars, however, understand the phrase δικαιοσύνη θεοῦ in ROM 1:17 as referring to God’s faithfulness to his promises made to Abraham. In other words, the focus would be upon God’s moral integrity, but it is difficult to relate this interpretation to the statement about faith in ROM 1:17b.

37.138 · Control, Rule · Release, Set Free

to release, to set free to cause to be released from the control of some state or situation involving moral issues In a number of languages the rendering of this expression in ROM 6:7 is extremely difficult; first, because of the figurative meaning of ‘to die to sin’ and secondly, because of the phrase ‘to be released from sin.’ It may be necessary to introduce a simile into the first clause and then to restructure considerably the second clause if one cannot speak of ‘the power of sin’ but must regard sin as exercising some kind of direct control. Accordingly, one may sometimes translate this expression in ROM 6:7 as ‘when a person is, as it were, dead as far as sinning is concerned, then sin no longer dominates him’ or ‘... then he is not controlled by his desires to sin.’

Collocation: δῖς ἀποθάνων completely dead (an idiom, literally: dying twice) the state of being completely dead The phrase δῖς ἀποθανόντα in JUD 1:12 refers specifically to trees, but figuratively to persons. It is possible that δῖς ἀποθανόντα is applicable to trees (1) on the basis that they die while still standing and (2) that death is fully confirmed by their being rooted up, but in view of the figurative context, it is better to translate δῖς ἀποθανόντα as simply ‘completely dead.’

14.49 · Physical Events and States · Light

brightness, shining, radiance the state of brightness or shining In a number of languages a clear distinction is made between some object which is bright in and of itself (that is to say, the source of brightness or radiance) and objects which are bright because they reflect light from some source. In the case of MAT 17:5 (which is generally regarded as a reference to the Shekinah presence of God), the cloud would not be merely reflecting light but would be a source of light (see 14.50).

In REV 15:8 (καὶ ἐγεμίσθη ὁ ναὸς καπνοῦ ἐκ τῆς δόξης τοῦ θεοῦ ‘and the temple was filled with smoke from the brightness of God’) the reference is evidently to the Shekinah. The Shekinah, which filled the Temple when it was first constructed (1KI 8:11), was regarded as a bright, cloud-like object which represented the personal presence of God.

ROM 6:19 · ROM 6:19

noun, m. | -ον

87.76 · Status · Slave, Free

slave, bondservant one who is a slave in the sense of becoming the property of an owner (though in ancient times it was frequently possible for a slave to earn his freedom) When Paul speaks of himself as a slave of Jesus Christ or of God in ROM 1:1, GAL 1:10, and TIT 1:1, the term δοῦλος focuses attention primarily upon his belonging to Christ or to God. There are probably also important positive overtones, since in some languages of the ancient Middle East a phrase meaning ‘slave of the king’ or ‘servant of the king’ had become the title of an important person in the government. For a discussion of certain further implications of the term δοῦλος, see the discussion at 87.81.

δράκων (G1404)

4.54 · Animals · Reptiles and Other ‘Creeping Things’

dragon a legendary animal, usually regarded as being a kind of monstrous winged serpent or lizard All references to δράκων in the NT occur in the book of Revelation (chapters 12, 13, 16, and 20), where the term is used as a descriptive epithet for the Devil. In a sense, therefore, the connotative values of the term ‘dragon’ are to some extent even more important than the specific denotation. In most areas of the world a term for dragon would imply something fearsome, but in certain parts of the Orient the dragon is regarded as the symbol of prosperity and good fortune, and it is necessary, therefore, in translating into certain languages in the Orient to employ (1) a somewhat different expression, for example, ‘terrible reptile’ or ‘fearsome snake’ or (2) a marginal note which will explain the differences in connotation.

12.44 · Supernatural Beings and Powers · Supernatural Powers power, authority, lordship, ruler, wicked force (title for supernatural forces and powers) a supernatural power having some particular role in controlling the destiny and activities of human beings Some scholars have believed that it is possible to reconstruct at least in part some of the hierarchy represented by these various supernatural forces and powers, on the basis of the neoplatonic system of nine such powers arranged in three orders of three each. NT terminology and usage does not, however, lend itself to such a classification, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to determine what are the significant differences between these supernatural powers and forces. In the case of EPH 1:21 some scholars apply the terms in question both to the supernatural and to the human sphere, thus emphasizing the totality of Christ’s rule. This has a considerable measure of justification in view of the concepts held by persons in the ancient world, since various earthly powers were supposed to reflect corresponding supernatural powers.

For the most part, translators have endeavored to render the various terms in somewhat different ways, for example, ἐξουσία as ‘authority’; δύναμις as ‘power’; κυριότης as ‘ruler’; and phrases such as τὰ πνευματικά της πονηρίας ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις as ‘wicked spiritual forces in the heavenly world.’ In a number of languages, however, there are simply not enough terms to designate various kinds of powers, authorities, and forces which could be employed in speaking of such supernatural impersonal powers. Accordingly, some translators have simply used a phrase such as ‘any and all kinds of supernatural powers.’ Where it is possible to make certain lexical distinctions between terms and phrases, this, of course, should be done, but in a number of contexts this may be impossible, and accordingly, some explanation in a marginal note may be required if the reader is to understand satisfactorily the intent of the passages in question.
