Παγιδεύω

Παγιδεύω

Παγιδεύω (G3802)

verb | παγίς

27.30 · Learn · Learn Something Against Someone to trap, to catch off guard, to catch in a mistake (figurative extension of meaning of a term meaning literally ‘to hunt,’ ‘to trap,’ not occurring in the NT) to acquire information about an error or fault, with the purpose of causing harm or trouble In a number of languages it is possible to retain the figurative meaning of ‘trap’ or ‘catch,’ but in a number of instances other figures are used, for example, ‘to cause to trip,’ ‘to cause to fall,’ ‘to hear wrong words from his mouth,’ or ‘to use his words against him.’

MAT 22:15

Παγίς

Παγίς

Παγίς (G3803)

noun, f. | -ίδος | Παγιδεύω

6.23 · Artifacts · Traps, Snares

trap, snare a device used for trapping or snaring, principally birds Since snares or traps for capturing birds are almost universal, there should be no difficulty involved in obtaining an appropriate term, though in the context of LUK 21:34-LUK 21:35 the function of παγίς is figurative and clearly marked as a simile. It may be necessary in some instances to expand the simile somewhat as ‘as a snare is used to catch birds.’

LUK 21:35 · ROM 11:9

21.4 · Danger, Risk, Safe, Save · Danger

danger, trap (a figurative extension of meaning of παγίς[a] ‘trap,’ 6.23) that which brings or is a means of sudden danger Though in 1TI 6:9 παγίδα and ἐπιθυμίας πολλάς are syntactically coordinate, the semantic relationship involves dependency, since the danger consists of the many foolish and harmful desires. One could translate, therefore, ‘the danger of many foolish and harmful desires’ or ‘the danger of being trapped by many foolish and harmful desires.’ In this way, something of the literal as well as the figurative meaning of παγίς may be retained.

1TI 3:7 · 1TI 6:9 · 2TI 2:26

37.15 · Control, Rule · Control, Restrain means of control, way of trapping (figurative extension of meaning of παγίς[a] ‘trap’ 6.23) an instrument or means for gaining control, implying an element of surprise In a number of languages, it is possible to reflect something of the figurative meaning of παγίς by translating the term as a verb, for example, ‘may they be caught and trapped at their feasts’ or ‘may their feasts snare and trap them’ (see 6.23 and 6.24).

παιδαγωγός

παιδαγωγός

παιδαγωγός (G3807)

noun, m. | -οῦ | παίζω + ἄγω

36.5 · Guide, Discipline, Follow · Guide, Lead

guardian, leader, guide a person who guides, directs, and shows concern for It may be difficult to render appropriately ἐπίτροπος[b] and παιδαγωγός with a combined meaning of guiding and caring for. It may, in fact, be necessary in some instances to use two verbal expressions, for example, ‘to guide and to help’ or ‘to help by leading’ or ‘to care for by leading.’

In classical times, a παιδαγωγός was a man, usually a slave, whose task it was to conduct a boy to and from school and to supervise and direct his general conduct. He was not a teacher.

Παιδάριον

Παιδάριον (G3808)

noun, n. | -ον | παίζω

9.42 · People · Children

child (diminutive of παῖς[a] ‘child,’ 9.41, but in the NT παιδάριον has seemingly lost at least most of this diminutive force, but may have retained some implications of affectionate concern or interest) a child, normally below the age of puberty Note that παιδάριον in JHN 6:9 denotes merely a child; it is the referential pronoun ὅς which indicates masculine gender, and therefore one may translate ‘boy.’

It is also possible that in this context the diminutive παιδάριον carries some connotation of endearment.

Παιδιόθεν

Παιδιόθεν

Παιδιόθεν (G3812)

advb. | παίζω

67.153 · Time · Indefinite Units of Time: Age, Lifetime, Interval, Period

since childhood the period from the time a person is a child until the time of the context¹ In παιδιόθεν, the stem παιδιο would suggest an age somewhat older than in the case of βρέφος[b] ‘infancy’ (67.152). παιδιόθεν, accordingly, would probably refer to a period of time which begins after a child has been weaned.

MRK 9:21

¹ The meanings of terms in 67.152-67.158 could almost be treated equally well in Domain 23 Physiological Processes and States, since these could be regarded as simply derivatives of physiological states. However, the focus of meaning in the respective contexts seems to be more upon a particular period of time rather than upon a physiological state or condition.

πάλαι (G3819)

advb. | παλαιόω

67.24 · Time · A Point of Time with Reference to Other Points of Time: Before, Long Ago, Now, At the Same Time, When, About, After long ago, of long ago pertaining to a point of time preceding another point of time, with an interval of considerable length¹ References to a point of time preceding another point of time may express a relationship to an event in the discourse or to the time of the discourse itself. In HEB 1:1 πάλαι[a] marks a point of time long before the actual writing of this Letter to the Hebrews. The same is true of ἔκπαλαι in 2PE 3:5. In some languages it is necessary to indicate clearly whether the interval is (1) between a prior time and the event mentioned in the discourse or (2) between a prior time and the discourse itself. For example, in HEB 1:1 it may be necessary to translate ‘long ago before now God spoke to our ancestors through the prophets’ or ‘long ago before now that I am writing ...’

already, already for some time a point of time preceding another point of time and implying completion, but with a longer interval of time than in the case of ἤδη (67.20) The use of πάλαι in MRK 15:44 would seem to suggest that Jesus’ death had taken place considerably sooner than what Pilate had thought would happen. In trying to render the implication of πάλαι[c], it may be possible to translate MRK 15:44 as ‘Pilate called the army officer and asked him if Jesus had indeed already died.’

¹ It is possible that ἔκπαλαι[a] is somewhat more emphatic than πάλαι[a], but this cannot be determined from existing contexts.

Though in some translations τῆς παλαιᾶς διαθήκης is rendered as ‘the old covenant,’ it is important to distinguish in the meanings of ‘old’ between that which has lasted for a long time and that which comes from a period long ago. It is the latter meaning which is relevant in the context of 2CO 3:14.

¹ MRK 15:13 There are certain difficulties involved in the interpretation of πάλιν in MRK 15:13, for this is the first instance in this Marcan context in which reference is made to the crowds shouting. The introduction of πάλιν may be the result of harmonization, or it could mean ‘they shouted back.’ It is also possible to interpret πάλιν in the sense of ‘and in turn they shouted.’ One may, however, assume a first occurrence of such a shout in verse 11.

weapons and armor a complete set of instruments used in defensive or offensive warfare (usually, however, with emphasis upon defensive armament, including helmet, shield, breastplate) πανοπλία is also used figuratively in the NT as a reference to the virtues of Christian character used in the strife against evil: ἐνδύσασθε τὴν πανοπλίαν τοῦ θεοῦ πρὸς τὸ δύνασθαι ὑμᾶς στῆναι πρὸς τὰς μεθοδείας τοῦ διαβόλου ‘put on all the armor that God gives you, so that you will stand up against the Devil’s evil tricks’ EPH 6:11.

Since certain ancient types of armor are no longer used to any extent in fighting, it may be necessary to employ descriptive expressions in order to make clear the types of weapons and/or instruments which were involved. Offensive weapons are often spoken of as ‘tools with which one kills or harms an enemy,’ while defensive armor may be described as ‘what one wears to defend oneself when fighting.’ The complete sense of πανοπλία may then be described in some languages as ‘tools with which one fights against the enemy and what one uses to defend oneself’ or ‘... to protect oneself.’

¹ ACT 16:13 Rather than set up a special meaning of παρά as 'to a point beside,' it seems far better to understand παρά in ACT 16:13 as meaning simply 'beside' and to assume an ellipsis of some verb of movement which could be readily omitted in view of the preceding ἐξήλθομεν. ² There are no doubt certain subtle distinctions in the meanings of the terms in 83.9 (μέσος[a], ἀνά μέσον, ἐντός[a], ἐν[b], μετά[h], εἰς[e], ἐπί[c], πρὸς[d], παρά[b]). For example, πρὸς[d] may suggest some kind of interaction or response and παρά[b] may focus upon association, but it is difficult, if not impossible, on the basis of existing contexts to define precisely the differences in meaning. ³ The occurrence of a preposition with a particular case relationship may be described as an instance of a noncontiguous semantic unit in which both features join in signaling the meaning. But it is also possible to analyze such a relationship as one in which a case suffix marks the particular meaning which may be assigned to a preposition. ⁴ There are undoubtedly certain subtle distinctions of meaning associated with the various markers in 90.20, but it is impossible to determine those differences on the basis of existing contexts. ⁵ No doubt the meanings in this series (ἀπό[i], ἐκ[b], ὅθεν[b], παρά[j]) differ somewhat, but it is not possible on the basis of the contexts now available to determine precisely what designative or associative features of meaning may be involved.

transgressor (derivative of παραβαίνω[a] ‘to disobey, to break the law,’ 36.28) a person who customarily breaks or disobeys the law For terms involving ‘disobedience’ or ‘transgression,’ there are often a number of subtle distinctions reflecting several different types of contrasts. For example, there may be important distinctions between disobeying a person and disobeying a law or custom. A number of languages also make a clear distinction between intentional and unintentional disobedience or transgression. Another distinction may involve repeated activity or consistency of attitude, so that the choice of terms may specify whether a person has consistently disobeyed or has only disobeyed once or twice. A further distinction is sometimes made between disobedience of children or those who are mentally incapacitated and the disobedience of those who should know better. Accordingly, in the choice of terms for various passages of Scripture it is extremely important to note the distinctive features of meaning; otherwise, much of the emphasis upon disobedience and transgression as stated in the Scriptures may be seriously distorted.

parable, figure, allegory, figure of speech a relatively short narrative with symbolic meaning In almost all languages there is some way of speaking about parables or allegories. The equivalent in some languages may be 'a likeness story' or 'a story that teaches' or 'a story that points the way' or 'words that have another meaning' or 'words that are saying something else important.'

Some scholars have insisted that in the NT παραβολή is used only in the sense of a story with one level of symbolic meaning, but in some contexts παραβολή is also used to identify allegories in which each element of the account has a symbolic significance. It is therefore extremely difficult to make a rigid distinction between parables and allegories.

¹ It is possible that there are slight distinctions in meaning between παρέρχομαι[a], παραπορεύομαι, and παράγω[b] in view of certain distinctions of meaning in ἔρχομαι, πορεύομαι, and ἄγω (especially in the sense of ὑπάγω). παρέρχομαι[a] may therefore be judged to be more generic in meaning, while παραπορεύομαι may refer specifically to walking along, and παράγω[b] may involve primarily the act of passing beyond a particular point.

Παράδεισος (G3857)

1.14 · Geographical Objects and Features · Regions Above the Earth

paradise a dwelling place of the righteous dead in a state of blessedness (generally equated with οὐρανός[b] ‘heaven,’ 1.11) In some languages ‘paradise’ has been translated by a borrowed term, but more often than not it is rendered by an expression which is roughly equivalent to ‘that wonderful place’ or even ‘that wonderful place in heaven.’

In REV 2:7 ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ τοῦ θεοῦ ‘in the paradise of God,’ the reference may reflect somewhat more closely the historical background of this term, which is derived from an Old Persian word meaning ‘enclosure,’ and thus was applied to a ‘garden’ or ‘park.’ For that reason, a number of commentators have believed that in REV 2:7, it is appropriate to translate ‘the garden of God,’ especially since in the context the reference is to the fruit of the tree of life.

¹ There are no doubt certain contextual constraints involved in the choice of ἀναδέχομαι[a], ἀποδέχομαι[a], ἐπιδέχομαι[a], εἰσδέχομαι, ὑποδέχομαι, προσδέχομαι[b], and παραδέχομαι[b] in the sense that the spacial relationships involved in the welcoming of a guest can be reflected in the prepositional prefixes. For example, in LUK 8:40 the use of ἀποδέχομαι may focus upon the particular source, while ἐπιδέχομαι in 3JN 1:10 may be relevant in view of the fact that the believers are coming to a particular point. προσδέχομαι in LUK 15:2 may suggest a kind of reciprocal relationship which is established with outcasts, and παραδέχομαι in ACT 15:4 may simply point to spacial proximity. However, it would be wrong to insist upon clear distinctions in meaning based on the very limited number of contexts involved. Some of these same distinctions in spacial relations may exist for the set προσλαμβάνομαι[e], παραλαμβάνω[d], and ἀπολαμβάνω[d].

12.19 · Supernatural Beings and Powers · Supernatural Beings

Helper, Encourager, Mediator (a title for the Holy Spirit) one who helps, by consoling, encouraging, or mediating on behalf of The principal difficulty encountered in rendering παράκλητος is the fact that this term covers potentially such a wide area of meaning. The traditional rendering of ‘Comforter’ is especially misleading because it suggests only one very limited aspect of what the Holy Spirit does. A term such as ‘Helper’ is highly generic and can be particularly useful in some languages. In certain instances, for example, the concept of ‘Helper’ is expressed idiomatically, for example, ‘the one who mothers us’ or, as in one language in Central Africa, ‘the one who falls down beside us,’ that is to say, an individual who upon finding a person collapsed along the road, kneels down beside the victim, cares for his needs, and carries him to safety.

A rendering based upon the concept of legal advocate seems in most instances to be too restrictive. Furthermore, there may be quite unsatisfactory connotations associated with any word which suggests a lawyer, especially since in so many societies, a lawyer is thought of primarily as one who ‘bribes the judges’ or ‘can speak two truths’ or, as in one language, is ‘a professional liar.’ See also παράκλητος 35.16 and especially its footnote.

¹ The meaning of παράκλητος overlaps considerably with other domains. It certainly involves psychological factors of encouragement and therefore may very well be treated in Domain 25 Attitudes and Emotions. There is also a sense in which παράκλητος inevitably involves some communication, and therefore it may fittingly be analyzed in Domain 33 Communication. The role of intercession has certain legal implications, and accordingly, παράκλητος is justifiably related to legal procedures in Domain 56 Courts and Legal Procedures. It is very rare indeed that any one term in a receptor language will have all of the distinctive features of meaning possessed by παράκλητος, especially in reference to the role of the Holy Spirit (see 12.19).

36.27 · Guide, Discipline, Follow · Obey, Disobey to refuse to listen, to refuse to obey, disobedience to refuse to listen to and hence to disobey It would be a mistake to translate παρακούω[a], παρακοή, and παραιτέομαι[e] as meaning nothing more than ‘not to listen to.’ The meaning is clearly ‘to refuse to listen to’ or ‘to refuse to pay attention to,’ and hence ‘to disobey.’ It may therefore be best in a number of instances to translate ‘to refuse to obey.’

27.39 · Learn · Try To Learn to try to learn, to desire to learn (a figurative extension of meaning of παρακύπτω[b] ‘to stoop and look into,’ 24.13) to make considerable effort in order to try to find out something

JAS 1:25 · 1PE 1:12

¹ In παρακύπτω[a] there appear to be two coordinate semantic elements: ‘to stoop down’ and ‘to look into.’ It is possible, of course, to understand the second element as implying the purpose for the first, but in translation it is essential that both elements, especially in the context of JHN 20:11, be adequately noted. The fact that there are two significant elements of meaning in παρακύπτω[a] means that this term is essentially a member of two different domains at the same time, namely, Domain 17 dealing with Stances and Domain 24 Sensory Events and States. ² Since παρακύπτω, particularly in the context of JHN 20:11, involves two quite distinct semantic features, namely ‘to stoop down’ and ‘to look into,’ it may be classified either as a particular stance (17.31) with the added element of seeing, or one may classify παρακύπτω as here, in the sensory subdomain of ‘seeing,’ with an adjunct feature of ‘stooping down.’ See also 17.31 and footnote.

leopard refers to two members of the large cat family: Panthera pardus - leopard; about 2 m in length and yellowish brown with black spots arranged in rosettes all over the body and tail; hunts by stalking prey; and Acinonyx jubatus - cheetah; spotted but are slightly smaller and have longer legs than leopards; extremely fast; symbol of violent danger or of speed (cheetah) As in the case of the term for 'bear' (4.12), this reference to a leopard occurs in the NT only in REV 13:2 and is likewise used as a means of describing the apocalyptic beast. A term referring to a local type of leopard or jaguar would be perfectly appropriate, and in some languages a term referring to a mountain lion has been employed. In other instances the equivalent expression is based upon a phrase meaning 'fierce, large, cat-like animal.' A borrowed term may also be employed with a descriptive classifier, for example, 'an animal called leopard.'

Παρθένος

Παρθένος

Παρθένος (G3933)

9.39 · People · Females

virgin, young woman a female person beyond puberty but not yet married and a virgin (though in some contexts virginity is not a focal component of meaning) In ACT 21:9 (τούτω δὲ ἦσαν θυγατέρες τέσσαρες Παρθένοι ‘he had four virgin daughters’) the emphasis seems to be upon the fact that the daughters were not as yet married. (See 34.77.) Similarly, in MAT 25:1 the ten παρθένοι are unmarried girls desirous of participating in a wedding party, and the emphasis would seem to be more upon their being unmarried rather than upon their being virgins.

In obtaining a satisfactory term for ‘virgin,’ there are often a number of difficulties. For example, a term which designates a virgin may also imply participation in a particular set of ritual or cult practices consisting of puberty rites, in which ritual sexual intercourse is an integral element. In some languages a term which technically means ‘virgin’ is also employed with unacceptable connotations in that it may suggest that the woman in question has a queer personality or unattractive appearance and therefore is to be sexually avoided. In some instances a term which in some contexts may be equivalent to ‘virgin’ may also refer to a homosexual female who has not had relations with a man but who does engage in sexual relations with women.

MAT 1:23 · MAT 25:1 · MAT 25:7 · MAT 25:11 · LUK 1:27 · LUK 1:27 · ACT 21:9 · 1CO 7:34 · 1CO 7:36 · 1CO 7:37 · 1CO 7:38 · 2CO 11:2

virgin, chaste an adult male who has not engaged in sexual relations with a woman It is very rare that the same term can be applied to a man who has not engaged in sexual relations with a woman as is used in speaking of a woman who has not had sexual relations with a man. In fact, in English the use of ‘virgin’ as applied to a man seems strange. In many languages there is simply no term for a man who is a virgin, since such a state is regarded as being rather unthinkable. However, the first part of this statement in REV 14:4 indicates clearly the state of the persons in question. But if one does attempt to find a satisfactory term, it is important to determine whether such a word implies homosexuality, for this tends to be the case in some languages. See also comments at 9.39.

In most languages terms for the age-grading of females parallel quite closely those relating to males. The principal distinctions in age include (1) girl babies before the age of weaning; (2) from weaning to puberty; (3) from puberty to marriage; (4) from marriage to menopause; and (5) after menopause.

34.77 · Association · Marriage, Divorce

unmarried person a person who has not as yet married (and possibly implying virginity) Some scholars interpret παρθένος[c] as referring not only to those who have never married, but also to widows and widowers who have not remarried. The meaning of unmarried persons who are not necessarily virgins is well attested in Greek from classical times.

In fact, the negative in this expression may result in serious misunderstanding, and therefore it may be better to translate ‘I want to have an opportunity to talk with you as I travel on through’ or ‘I wish to visit you at least for a while as I journey on.’

33.15 · Communication · Discourse Types

parable, figure, allegory, figure of speech a relatively short narrative with symbolic meaning In almost all languages there is some way of speaking about parables or allegories. The equivalent in some languages may be ‘a likeness story’ or ‘a story that teaches’ or ‘a story that points the way’ or ‘words that have another meaning’ or ‘words that are saying something else important.’

Some scholars have insisted that in the NT παραβολή is used only in the sense of a story with one level of symbolic meaning, but in some contexts παραβολή is also used to identify allegories in which each element of the account has a symbolic significance. It is therefore extremely difficult to make a rigid distinction between parables and allegories.

But in 2CO 9:2 it may also represent an instance in which the original meaning of a term has been largely lost or at least reduced to primarily a marker of causative relation. It appears likely that παροξυσμός in HEB 10:24 has also been largely reduced to a marker of a causative relation, in other words, ‘to cause people to love and to do good,’ but since in this instance there seems to be some focus upon the psychological factors involved, one may translate παροξυσμός as ‘to encourage.’

always, constantly, continually (an idiom, literally: through all) duration of time, either continuous or episodic, but without limits In some languages there may be problems involved in rendering αἰεί or διὰ παντός[b], since there may be a basic distinction between (a) continuous activity and (b) activity which may be defined as episodic in that it regularly recurs in related episodes. For example, in 2CO 6:10 the fact of being glad may be related specifically to the occasions of being saddened, while in MAT 18:10 the focus of meaning is probably upon the continuous nature of the relation.

¹ In Attic Greek ἄπας occurs after consonants and πᾶς after vowels, but this distinction is not maintained in the NT, and there is insufficient evidence to indicate any significant distinction in meaning, though some persons have believed that ἄπας is somewhat more emphatic. ² There may very well be certain significant differences of meaning in this series of degree expressions, but this is difficult, if not impossible, to determine from existing contexts.

51.6 · Festivals

Passover festival, Passover the Jewish festival commemorating the deliverance of Jews from Egypt In some languages the term Πάσχα has been borrowed in one form or another, but frequently it is necessary to have some qualifying statement to identify this festival, for example, 'a festival to celebrate the passing over of the angel' or 'a festival to celebrate deliverance from Egypt.'

Passover lamb a specially selected lamb (or a collective for all such lambs) killed and eaten during the festival commemorating the departure of Israel from Egypt The term πάσχα (a borrowing from Hebrew) has three different meanings which refer to three different aspects of the Passover. In a context which speaks of ‘the Passover taking place’ (MAT 26:2), the meaning is the festival (51.6). With a term such as ἐτοιμάζειν ‘to prepare’ (MAT 26:19), the term πάσχα means ‘the Passover meal,’ that is to say, ‘to prepare the Passover meal’ (51.7). But with a term meaning ‘to kill’ or ‘to sacrifice’ (LUK 22:7), the meaning is ‘the Passover lamb.’ These different meanings in Greek reflect similar uses in Hebrew.

It is often impossible, however, to use a phrase such as ‘Passover lamb,’ since a literal rendering may suggest ‘a lamb that passes over’ or ‘a lamb that someone has passed over,’ either in the sense of ‘ridden over’ or ‘neglected.’ It is therefore necessary in many languages to expand the phrase ‘the Passover lamb’ to read ‘the lamb that is eaten at the Passover Festival’ or ‘the lamb associated with the Festival that celebrates the passing over.’ It may even be necessary to expand the phrase ‘passing over’ to refer specifically to the passing over of the angel of death, and in certain instances one cannot even employ a literal rendering such as ‘passing over,’ since this might mean merely ‘flying above.’ Therefore, it may be necessary to use an expression roughly equivalent to ‘passing by.’ It may, however, be better to use a short, though somewhat obscure, expression in the text and provide a full explanation in a marginal note or glossary.

12.12 · Supernatural Beings and Powers · Supernatural Beings

Father (title for God, literally: father) one who combines aspects of supernatural authority and care for his people² In a number of languages it is necessary to distinguish clearly between 'Father' when referring to the heavenly Father and 'father' as a reference to a human father. The use of capitalization is quite satisfactory for the individual who is reading a text but not for one who is hearing it read, and since more people hear a text read than read it for themselves, it is essential that the reference of 'Father' be clear. In order to identify the use of 'Father' as a title for God, it is possible in many languages to use 'Father in heaven' or 'Father above' or 'Father God.'

In some languages it may even be necessary to identify the 'Father' as the creator and therefore employ a phrase such as 'our Father who created us.'

A particularly complicating factor involved in the use of 'Father' as a title for God is its occurrence without a pronominal reference as to whose father is involved. For example, in a number of languages one cannot speak of 'father' without indicating whose father, because a person does not become a father except by some relationship to another individual. Therefore, one must always speak of 'my father' or 'his father' and never simply 'the father.' In passages in which Jesus is speaking of 'the Father' in relationship to himself, it is necessary usually to employ a phrase such as 'my Father.' When, however, 'Father' is used as a title for 'God' in his relationship to people generally, then one may speak of 'our Father' (normally with an inclusive first person plural pronoun if the language in question makes a distinction between inclusive and exclusive first person plural pronoun referents).

¹ The Aramaic word אבβא meaning ‘father’ occurs in the NT only as a title for God (see 12.12). ² Items 12.4-12.8, (12.9) and 12.12 in this domain are titles for θεός[a] God (12.1). As titles, they have precisely the same reference as θεός[a], but they each contribute distinctive meanings which are legitimate qualifications of the referent in question.³ ACT 22:1 In ACT 22:1, as noted in 11.25 and 11.26, the use of ἀδελφοί focuses more upon identification of the speaker with the persons addressed, while πατέρες implies respect accorded those representing an older generation.⁴ πατήρ and μήτηρ in this figurative sense do not differ essentially in meaning. The choice of either πατήρ or μήτηρ depends entirely upon the contextual referent which serves as the original example or archetype.⁵ 1CO 4:15 In Greek the expression οὐ πολλοὺς πατέρας clearly seems to be an instance of understatement, and it may therefore be translated as ‘only one spiritual father.’ The phrase ‘in Christ’ probably refers to matters concerning the Christian life.

10.24 · Kinship Terms · Kinship Relations Involving Successive Generations

lineage, family line persons of successive generations who are related by birth¹ In biblical times the reckoning of a lineage was somewhat complex in view of certain distinctions between legal and biological relations. The focus of meaning in γένεσις[b], οἶκος[c], and πατριά[a] is not, however, the list of ancestors, but the lineage of successively related persons to which the reference person belongs. Some scholars, however, interpret γένεσις[c] history, 33.19).

In some languages a successive series of ancestors is called ‘the forefathers’ or ‘those to whom one looks back’ or ‘those who have gone ahead.’ In other languages a lineage is referred to as ‘a person’s root’ or ‘a man’s trunk’ (referring to the trunk of a tree).

In LUK 2:4 there appears to be no significant difference in meaning between οἶκος and πατριά, and in some receptor languages it would be sufficient to use a single term essentially equivalent to ‘lineage.’ The two terms appear to simply reinforce their shared meaning.

nation, people a relatively large unit of people who constitute a sociopolitical group, sharing a presumed biological descent (in many contexts πατριά[b] and φυλή[b] are very similar in meaning to ἔθνος and λαός[a], 11.55)

ACT 3:25 · EPH 3:15

¹ πατριά[a] and φυλή[b] nation, people (11.56) focus attention upon a particular people as a socially functioning unit, while the feature of biological descent is largely secondary. But in the case of γένος[b] and σάρξ[e], the feature of biological descent is focal, while group functioning is largely secondary.

Collocation: πείθω τὴν καρδίαν to be confident, to be assured (an idiom, literally: to convince the heart) to exhibit confidence and assurance in a situation which might otherwise cause dismay or fear

1JN 3:19

¹ ACT 5:36 It would be possible to understand πείθομαι in ACT 5:36 as meaning ‘those who trust in’ or ‘... rely on,’ and as such πείθομαι would then be classified along with πείθω[b] ‘to trust in,’ ‘to have complete confidence in’ (31.82). However, in ACT 5:36 the meaning seems to be much closer to that of μαθητεύω[a] and ἀκολουθέω[c] (36.31), since in ACT 5:36 the emphasis is upon the relationship of followers to Theudas rather than upon their confidence in or reliance upon him.

noun, n. | -ους

1.73 · Geographical Objects and Features · Bodies of Water

open sea, high sea, the deep, ocean the relatively deep area of the sea or ocean sufficiently far from land as to be beyond the range of any protection from the seacoast In order to designate the high sea or the ocean, it may be necessary in some instances to speak of ‘the sea far from land’ or ‘the sea out of sight of land.’ People who live near the ocean and are seafaring frequently have quite distinct terms for different conditions of the sea, whether, for example, it is stormy, moderately rough, or relatively calm. Languages may also use different terms in speaking of different areas of the sea or ocean. Note, for example, in English the use of China Sea, North Sea, Bering Sea, in contrast with Indian Ocean, Pacific Ocean, Atlantic Ocean. In English this contrast is relatively fixed, but it does reflect a gradation of size, since sea is used normally in speaking of smaller areas than is the case with ocean.

Περιοιπτω (G0681a)

verb | aor.ptc. περιάψας | ἄπτω

14.65 · Physical Events and States · Burning to ignite, to kindle, to set ablaze, to start a fire, to light a lamp to cause the process of burning to begin As already noted in the series of terms listed in 14.63, languages differ appreciably in terms employed for different phases and results of burning. For example, to set something on fire for the sake of providing warmth may be expressed by quite a different term from that which is used in speaking of the process of setting something on fire in order to destroy it.

It is possible that περιάπτω, in view of the prefix περι-, adds a component of ‘round about,’ suggesting that the blaze or fire was for the benefit of those who encircled the fire.

1CO 11:15 · HEB 1:12

6.172 · Artifacts · Cloth, Leather, and Objects Made of Such Materials cloak, coat, robe any type of outer garment² The choice of an equivalent for these terms relating to ‘outer garments’ will depend largely upon the specific context and the usage in each receptor language. The most common equivalent is a term meaning ‘coat.’

HEB 1:12

¹ περιβόλαιον[a] and σκέπασμα could also be treated as derivatives based on their respective corresponding events involving the covering of an object. The derivatives would then be merely instruments for covering. Since, however, in the NT these two terms are so closely associated with clothing as covering, they are here treated in this subdomain. ² There are no doubt certain minor distinctions in meaning for the four terms in 6.172, but it is impossible to determine the distinctive features on the basis of existing contexts. There are considerable differences of opinion about φαιλόνης, regarded by many as a loan word from Latin paenula.

14.44 · Physical Events and States · Light to shine around to illuminate an area surrounding an object There may be difficulties involved in expressing the concept of ‘to shine around,’ since a more or less literal rendering might suggest a particular circle of light moving around an object. A more satisfactory way of dealing with this problem of ‘to shine around’ is to say ‘it was light there’ or ‘light shone upon me.’ In the case of ACT 26:13, one may translate ‘I saw a light from the sky there where I was.’

to abound, to be in abundance, to be a lot of, to exist in a large quantity, to be left over (derivative of περισσός[c] 'abundant,' 59.51) to be or exist in abundance, with the implication of being considerably more than what would be expected In a number of languages it is extremely difficult to find an equivalent of 'to abound.' Moreover, it is not at all easy to find an expression of quantity which seems to go satisfactorily with 'the sufferings of Christ.' In some languages the closest equivalent of this expression in 2CO 1:5 may be 'for just as we suffer a great deal, even as Christ suffered.' It would be wrong, however, to use an expression for 'suffering' which would suggest vicarious suffering.

The rendering of περῖσσει in ACT 16:5 as 'to grow' results from the expression τῷ ἀριθμῷ. In a number of languages the equivalent would be 'the number of people in the churches increased every day' or 'how many believers there were was more and more each day.'

The verb περῖσσεύετε in 1TH 4:1 may be regarded as a kind of substitute verb referring to περιπατεῖτε and indicating essentially a matter of degree. This is, of course, further reinforced by μᾶλλον (78.28).

to cause to be intense, to cause to be more, to cause to grow to cause an increase in the degree of some experience or state! It would seem that πλεονάσαι and περῖσσεύσαι in 1TH 3:12 simply reinforce the meaning of intense degree. It is assumed that these two expressions are not completely synonymous, but it is difficult to determine precisely how they may contrast. It may simply be that περῖσσεύσαι is somewhat more emphatic.

65.47 · Value · Advantageous, Not Advantageous to have a greater benefit, to experience a superior advantage to experience superior benefit or advantage, implying some type of comparison In indicating ‘a superior advantage’ it may be necessary to be quite specific about the basis for the comparison. For example, in 1CO 8:8 it may be necessary to translate as ‘if we do eat, we will be no better off than if we did not eat,’ and in ROM 3:9 one may translate ‘what then; are we decidedly better off than the others are?’

Περιστερά

Περιστερά (G4058)

noun, f. | -ᾶς

dove, pigeon Asiatic Rock dove: bird with a blue-gray color with a pinkish sheen to the neck feathers and a black tip on its tail; lives in large colonies and eats mainly seeds; courts, mates, and has nests several times a year; nests on rock ledges; Columba via; used as food and for sacrifices; regarded as swift, docile, and innocent Though in English a relatively clear distinction is made between ‘doves’ (which have pointed tails) and ‘pigeons’ (which have square off tails), there seems to be no such distinction in the use of περιστερά and τρυγών in the Greek of the New Testament.

There are, however, certain problems involved in the connotations of terms relating to pigeons or doves. According to ancient zoology, the dove was thought to have no bile, and consequently, therefore, to be a very peaceful and clean bird. It thus became a symbol of Christian virtue and of gentleness (as in MAT 10:16). In reality, however, doves and pigeons are quite aggressive, and a group of pigeons are frequently known to peck an injured bird to death. Therefore, in some societies pigeons or doves are not regarded as gentle or peaceful, but rather as wicked and harmful. In fact, in some cultures doves are thought to be symbols of death and of evil. Under such circumstances it is important, therefore, to have some marginal note so as to indicate clearly the symbolic significance of such birds in biblical contexts.

to circumcise, circumcision to cut off the foreskin of the male genital organ as a religious rite involving consecration and ethnic identification In the case of societies which practice circumcision, there is normally a perfectly satisfactory term to designate this type of operation, though it may not have any religious significance but only be a part of puberty ritual. For societies which do not practice circumcision or are not well acquainted with such a practice, a term which specifically describes the operation may be both offensive and vulgar. It may therefore be necessary to use a borrowing or to employ a somewhat obscure term such as ‘to cut around’ and then to explain the specific meaning of the term or phrase in a glossary.

Even in the case of societies which practice circumcision, there may be problems in comprehension of the significance of such an act, and these difficulties may require marginal notes. If, for example, a society practices circumcision only in connection with puberty rites, it may seem inexplicable that Jesus would have been circumcised on the eighth day after his birth (LUK 2:21). In many societies such an act would seem to be either a deed of extreme cruelty to a baby or a sign of mature sexuality in an infant.

adjc. | -ον | χῶρος (a place) · χωρέω

1.80 · Geographical Objects and Features · Sociopolitical Areas surrounding region an area or region around or near some central or focal point In certain contexts, however, περίχωρος may include not only the surrounding region but also the point of reference, for example, τῆς περιχώρου τῶν Γερασηνῶν ‘the Gerasenes and the people living around them’ LUK 8:37. In a context such as MAT 3:5, ἡ περίχωρος τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, it is difficult to speak of ‘the area surrounding the Jordan River,’ since a river is not like a city which would constitute a center. Accordingly, one must often translate ἡ περίχωρος τοῦ Ἰορδάνου as ‘the land on both sides of the River Jordan.’

Πετεινός

Πετεινός (G4071) — Πετεινόν

noun, n. | -οῦ | Πέτομαι

4.38 · Animals · Birds

bird any kind of bird, wild or domestic All languages have at least some terms for birds, but there may be no generic term which identifies birds while excluding all other creatures which fly. For example, in some languages a term which includes all kinds of birds also includes flying insects and bats. However, since in most instances such a term has birds as its primary reference, it can usually be employed in contexts in which birds are more or less readily identified by other expressions in the passage. In other languages generic terms for birds may identify only certain classes of birds, for example, birds of prey, water birds, and birds of the forest.

4.41 · Animals · Birds

Collocation: Πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ birds, wild birds (an idiom, literally: birds of the sky) wild birds in contrast with domesticated birds such as chickens A literal rendering of Πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, either as ‘birds of the air’ or ‘birds of the sky,’ may be misleading, since ‘birds of the air’ might imply that these are birds made out of air, and ‘birds of the sky’ might suggest they are birds which remain always in the sky. In some languages the equivalent expression is ‘birds of the trees’ or ‘birds of the winds.’

Πέτρα

πέτρα

πέτρα (G4073)

noun, f. | -ας | πετρῶδες

2.21 · Natural Substances · Earth, Mud, Sand, Rock

rock, bedrock bedrock (possibly covered with a thin layer of soil), rocky crags, or mountain ledges, in contrast with separate pieces of rock normally referred to as λίθος[a] (see 2.23)¹ ὁμοιωθήσεται ἀνδρὶ φρονίμῳ, ὅστις ὠκοδόμησεν αὐτοῦ τὴν οἰκίαν ἐπὶ τὴν πέτραν ‘he is like a wise man who built his house on bedrock’ MAT 7:24; ἔθηκεν αὐτὸν ἐν μνημείῳ ὃ ἦν λελατομημένον ἐκ πέτρας ‘they then put him in a grave which had been hewn from rock’ MRK 15:46; λέγουσιν τοῖς ὄρεσιν καὶ ταῖς πέτραις, Πέσσετε ἐφ’ ἡμᾶς ‘they said to the mountains and to the rock cliffs, Fall on us’ REV 6:16. In these three contexts πέτρα must be translated in some languages by three quite different terms. Bedrock, that is to say, the rock which lies horizontally and often just below the surface, may be referred to by one term, while rock with an exposed face into which a tomb could be hewn would be quite different. Similarly, the rocks which would be called upon to fall upon people would be rendered by a term referring to ‘cliffs’ or ‘precipices.’

In LUK 8:6 the term πέτρα in ἕτερον κατέπεσεν ἐπὶ τὴν πέτραν ‘other (seed) fell on rocky ground’ refers to bedrock which may be covered with a thin layer of soil. One may translate such an expression as ‘thin ground over rock’ or ‘just a little soil on top of rock.’

In those passages which involve a play on words with the name Πέτρος ‘Peter,’ πέτρα refers to bedrock, that is to say, the rock on which a foundation may be placed.

MAT 7:24 · MAT 7:25 · MAT 16:18 · MAT 27:51 · MAT 27:60 · MRK 15:46 · LUK 6:48 · LUK 8:6 · LUK 8:13 · ROM 9:33¹ · 1CO 10:4 · 1CO 10:4 · 1PE 2:8¹ · REV 6:15 · REV 6:16

¹ ROM 9:33 · 1PE 2:8 In ROM 9:33 and 1PE 2:8 πέτρα occurs in parallelism with λίθος stone, as a quotation from ISA 8:14. On the basis of this usage one might argue that λίθος and πέτρα are completely synonymous, at least in this context. One would then have to describe πέτρα as having two different meanings, one rock and another stone. Parallelism, however, does not mean identity of meaning. In fact, parallelism (in contrast with tautology) normally implies slight differences of meaning in corresponding lexical items.

πηλός

noun, m. | -οῦ

mud, clay moistened earth of a clay consistency πηλός contrasts with βόρβορος ‘watery mud’ (2.17) and refers to moist earth with a consistency of clay. It may be translated in some languages as ‘sticky soil’ or ‘clay-like mud’ or ‘moist dirt.’

In ROM 9:21 (ἢ οὐκ ἔχει ἐξουσίαν ὁ κεραμεὺς τοῦ πηλοῦ ‘or doesn’t the man who makes the pots have the right to use the clay as he wishes’) the reference is specifically to potter’s clay. The meaning of πηλός, therefore, may be defined as any kind of moist earth with clay consistency. πηλός includes the area of meaning of κέραμος ‘potter’s clay’ (a meaning not occurring in the NT).

Since pottery is so widely known throughout the world, there is normally no difficulty in obtaining a term which refers to potter’s clay. Even when the making of pottery is not known, it is usually possible to obtain a satisfactory term for such clay, for example, ‘mud that can be molded’ or ‘mud for shaping pots.’

to undergo a difficult experience, to drink the cup, to suffer (an idiom, literally: to drink a cup) to undergo a trying, difficult experience In a number of languages it is not possible to use the phrase ‘to drink the cup,’ since this will almost inevitably refer to the drinking of a poison cup as a means of proving innocence in an ordeal. Even if one uses a literal rendering of the idiom ‘to drink the cup,’ it is usually necessary to have some explanation as to the significance of the idiom.

Πιότης

Πιότης

Πιότης (G4096)

noun, f. | -ητος | πίων (fat, rich, fertile)

3.59 · Plants · Non-Fruit Parts of Plants fatness, rich quality a nutritionally rich, fatty quality The text of ROM 11:17 is strange, for literally it reads ‘of the root of the richness.’ As may be easily understood, a number of scribal variations occur in different manuscripts. Since the reference in ROM 11:17 is to the olive tree, the fruit of which produces so much oil, one can readily understand the basis for the extension of meaning. Some translations render πιότης simply as ‘sap’ (New English Bible), while others abandon completely the figure of speech, for example, TEV which has “you share the strong spiritual life.”¹

For another treatment of πιότης in ROM 11:17, see 65.7.

ROM 11:17²

65.7 · Value · Valuable, Lacking in Value richness, value (a figurative extension of meaning of πιότης[a] ‘fatness,’ 3.59) a rich, valuable substance For another interpretation of πιότης in ROM 11:17, see 3.59.

ROM 11:17²

¹ πιότης occurs in non-biblical Greek in the figurative sense of ‘wealth and riches,’ and it may be that in ROM 11:17 there is a blend of the conventional figurative meaning of ‘wealth’ with the more specific quality of fatness as exemplified by the fruit of the olive tree. See also 65.7 and footnote. ² ROM 11:17 It is difficult to determine whether the expression συγκοινωνός τῆς ρίζης τῆς Πιότητος τῆς ἐλαίας in ROM 11:17 should be interpreted merely as an instance of an extended figurative use of related terms, or whether πιότης should be understood in a metaphorical sense of ‘value’ or ‘wealth,’ which it had already acquired in secular literature. If πιότης is to be understood in a figurative sense, then one is likewise justified in regarding ρίζα in the figurative sense of ‘tradition’ and ἐλαία in this context as being a direct reference to Judaism.

Πιπράσκω (G4097)

verb | pf. πέπρακα · pf.pass. πέπραμαι · aor.pass. ἐπράθην · inf. πρᾶθῃναι · ptc.neut. πρᾶθέν

to sell to dispose of property or provide services in exchange for money or other valuable considerations πιπράσκω and ἀποδίδωμι (ἀποδίδωμι[e]) may also be used to refer to selling a person into slavery. Note, for example, πιπράσκω in MAT 18:25 (ἐκέλευσεν αὐτὸν ὁ κύριος πρᾶθῃναι ‘his master ordered him to be sold as a slave’) and ἀποδίδωμι in ACT 7:9 (οἱ πατριάρχαι ζηλώσαντες τὸν Ἰωσήφ ἀπέδοντο εἰς Αἴγυπτον ‘the patriarchs were jealous of Joseph and sold him to be a slave in Egypt’).

In a number of languages, however, it may be important to use a distinctive term for selling a person into slavery. In fact, it may be necessary to describe the event rather explicitly, for example, ‘to receive money for handing a person over to someone else to be a slave.’

In ROM 7:14 πιπράσκω is used figuratively in the phrase πεπραμένος ὑπὸ τὴν ἁμαρτίαν ‘sold as a slave to sin,’ in the sense that sin is personified as the master.

to believe in, to have confidence in, to have faith in, to trust, faith, trust to believe to the extent of complete trust and reliance In rendering πιστεύω[b] and πίστις[b] it would be wrong to select a term which would mean merely 'reliance' or 'dependency' or even 'confidence,' for there should also be a significant measure of 'belief,' since real trust, confidence, and reliance can only be placed in someone who is believed to have the qualities attributed to such a person.

31.87 · Hold a View, Believe, Trust · Trust, Rely faithful, trustworthy, dependable, reliable (derivative of πιστεύω[b] ‘to trust,’ 31.85) pertaining to being trusted Since πιστός[b] is a type of passive derivative of πιστεύω[b], it may be necessary in a number of languages to render this passive relationship in an active form. For example, the phrase δοῦλε ἀγαθὲ καὶ πιστέ in MAT 25:21 may be rendered as ‘good servant and one whom I can trust.’ In 2TI 2:11 the phrase πιστὸς ὁ λόγος may be rendered as ‘this is a saying we can have confidence in’ or ‘... that we can trust.’

Collocation: πιστή

believer, Christian, follower one (female) who is included among the faithful followers of Christ

ACT 16:1² · 1TI 5:16

¹ πιστή has also been treated in 11.17 as a name for a member of the Christian constituency. This is a good instance of complete overlapping in that the same term may be classified in two quite distinct ways, one based on group membership and the other based upon the type of belief which results in such membership. It would be possible, therefore, to indicate that in the case of πιστή[b] (= πιστός[e]) in 11.17 there is an added component of group identification, but one may also argue that such a feature of meaning is derived essentially from the context.² ACT 16:1 πιστή may also be regarded as a derivative of πιστεύω[c] to be a believer (31.102), but NT usage in a passage such as ACT 16:1 seems to focus more upon group adherence than upon the actual state of believing. See also 31.103 and footnote.

to increase considerably, to become more and more, to multiply to increase considerably the extent of an activity or state, with the implication of the result being an abundance It may be difficult in some languages to speak of 'sin increasing,' but in ROM 5:20 one can say 'where people sinned more and more.'

In 2CO 4:15 the increase would be in the instances of God's grace extending to more and more people.

to cause to be intense, to cause to be more, to cause to grow to cause an increase in the degree of some experience or state¹ It would seem that πλεονάσαι and περισσεύσαι in 1TH 3:12 simply reinforce the meaning of intense degree. It is assumed that these two expressions are not completely synonymous, but it is difficult to determine precisely how they may contrast. It may simply be that περισσεύσαι is somewhat more emphatic.

1TH 3:12 · 2TH 1:3

59.48 · Quantity · Abundance, Excess, Sparing

to be in abundance, to have in abundance to exist or be in abundance The two participial forms, ὑπάρχοντα (see 57.2) and πλεονάζοντα, are coalesced in the translation as 'have ... in abundance.'

In a number of languages the equivalent of this expression in 2PE 1:8 might be 'if you have a great many of these' or 'for if these are big with you.'

to sail, sailing the movement of a boat or ship through the water, either rowed or blown by the wind

LUK 8:23 · ACT 21:3 · ACT 27:2 · ACT 27:6 · ACT 27:24

54.27 · Maritime Activities

Collocation: ὁ ἐπὶ τόπον πλέων sea traveller, sea merchant one who frequently travels by sea¹

REV 18:17

¹ There are considerable differences of opinion as to the meaning of the expression ὁ ἐπὶ τόπον πλέων. It may denote merely passengers, but it probably has a more specialized meaning. Some prefer to interpret it as meaning one who sails along the coast.

πληγή

πληγή

πληγή (G4127)

noun, f. | -ῆς | πλήσσω

19.1 · Physical Impact · Hit, Strike to hit, to strike, to beat to strike or hit an object, one or more times One may also render this expression in LUK 12:48 as ‘does something for which he should be beaten.’

23.158 · Physiological Processes and States · Sickness, Disease, Weakness plague, pestilence a widespread contagious disease, often associated with divine retribution It is also possible to interpret πληγή in REV 11:6 as being somewhat more generic in meaning, that is to say, trouble or distress causing widespread suffering (see 22.13).

REV 9:18 · REV 9:20 · REV 11:6

22.13 · Trouble, Hardship, Relief, Favorable Circumstances · Trouble, Hardship, Distress

plague, great suffering, distress (a figurative extension of meaning of πληγή[c] ‘plague,’ 23.158) a type of trouble or distress causing widespread and/or intense suffering One may also render REV 18:4 as ‘so that you will not suffer as she is going to suffer.’

πλήθος

πλήθος (G4128)

noun, n. | -ους | πίμπλημι

59.9 · Quantity · Many, Few [Countables]

large number of, a multitude of a large number of countable objects or events, with the probable implication of some type of grouping

LUK 5:6 · JHN 5:3 · JHN 21:6 · ACT 4:32 · ACT 5:14 · ACT 17:4 · ACT 21:36 · ACT 28:3 · HEB 11:12 · JAS 5:20 · 1PE 4:8

11.1 · Groups and Classes of Persons and Members of Such Groups and Classes · General

crowd, multitude a casual non-membership group of people, fairly large in size and assembled for whatever purpose¹ In a number of languages there is no term corresponding to ‘crowd.’ One may, however, usually speak of such a group of people as ‘many people’ or ‘many men and women.’ Depending on the context, it may be necessary to indicate some relative difference in size, for example, ‘very large crowd’ or ‘many, many people.’ If the crowd is relatively small, one may sometimes speak of ‘just some people.’

MRK 3:7 · MRK 3:8 · LUK 1:10 · LUK 2:13 · LUK 6:17 · LUK 8:37 · LUK 19:37 · LUK 23:1 · LUK 23:27 · ACT 2:6 · ACT 5:16 · ACT 6:2 · ACT 6:5 · ACT 14:1 · ACT 14:4 · ACT 15:12 · ACT 15:30 · ACT 19:9 · ACT 23:7 · ACT 25:24

¹ In this set of terms referring to a crowd or a multitude, it is possible that πλήθος[b] denotes a somewhat larger group of persons than the other terms and that λαός[c] suggests a crowd made up of common people, but one cannot be certain of these distinctions from existing contexts.

πληθύνω (G4129)

verb | πίμπλημι

59.68 · Quantity · Increase, Decrease

to grow, to increase greatly, to multiply to increase greatly in number or extent It may be difficult to speak of ‘a number growing’ in some languages, so that one may need to translate this expression in ACT 6:7 as ‘the disciples in Jerusalem became more and more’ or ‘there were more and more disciples in Jerusalem.’

It may be difficult, if not impossible, to speak of ‘evil increasing’ as in MAT 24:12, but one can usually speak of a greater number of instances of doing evil, and therefore one may translate ‘more and more people will be doing what is evil.’

A literal rendering of ACT 12:24 may be impossible in many languages, for a strictly literal rendering would imply that somehow the message from God ‘got bigger,’ which may mean in some languages ‘resulted in lies.’ The meaning is, of course, that more and more people accepted God’s word as true.

MAT 24:12 · ACT 6:1 · ACT 6:7 · ACT 7:17 · ACT 9:31 · ACT 12:24 · 1PE 1:2 · 2PE 1:2 · JUD 1:2

59.69 · Quantity · Increase, Decrease

to increase, to cause an increase, to multiply to cause an increase in the number of objects In HEB 6:14 it is essential in most languages to specify what is increased. A strictly literal translation such as ‘to cause you to increase’ would simply mean ‘to cause you to get big.’ The reference is clearly to Abraham’s descendants, and it is usually essential to make this reference clear.

11.89 · Groups and Classes of Persons and Members of Such Groups and Classes · Socio-Political neighbor, brother a person who lives close beside others and who thus by implication is a part of a so-called in-group, that is, the group with which an individual identifies both ethnically and culturally It may be that of the three terms γείτων, περίοικος, and πλησίον[b], the last is somewhat broader in meaning. At least πλησίον is used in LUK 10:27 in a somewhat extended sense of ‘fellow man,’ while ἀδελφός[e] probably suggests a more intimate or close relationship.

The translation of πλησίον[b] as a singular in LUK 10:27 may pose a problem in understanding, since the singular may be understood in a specific rather than in a generic sense, that is to say, ‘love your neighbor as yourself’ might immediately give rise to the question ‘which neighbor?’ Therefore, one must often translate LUK 10:27 as ‘you must love your neighbors as you love yourselves’ or ‘you must love other people as you love yourselves.’

25.14 · Attitudes and Emotions · Desire Strongly gratification, indulgence the process of indulging in or procuring the satisfaction of certain desires or needs There have been extensive differences of opinion with regard to the precise meaning of πλησμονή and of σάρξ in COL 2:23. Some early Greek exegetes understood this passage to involve ‘gratification of physical needs,’ but since σάρξ seemingly needs to be understood in a bad sense, the meaning of ‘indulgence’ seems to be more appropriate. The meaning of ‘indulgence’ can be expressed in some languages as ‘to give in to’ or ‘to surrender to’ or ‘to permit oneself to enjoy.’

12.18 · Supernatural Beings and Powers · Supernatural Beings

Spirit, Spirit of God, Holy Spirit a title for the third person of the Trinity, literally: spirit In many religious systems the significant difference between the gods and the spirits is that the gods are regarded as supernatural beings which control certain aspects of natural phenomena, while the spirits are supernatural beings, often impersonal, which indwell or inhabit certain places, including rivers, streams, mountains, caves, animals, and people. Spirits are often regarded as being primarily evil, though it may be possible to induce them to be favorable to people. It is extremely difficult to find in some languages a fully satisfactory term to speak of the Spirit of God. If one uses a term which normally identifies local supernatural beings, there is a tendency to read into the term the meaning of evil or mischievous character. If, however, one uses a term which may identify the spirit of a person, the problems may even be greater, since according to many systems of religious belief, the spirit of an individual does not become active until the individual dies. Therefore, the activity of the Spirit of God would presumably suggest that God himself had died. However, if one uses a term which means ‘heart’ or ‘soul’ (and thus the Spirit of God would be literally equivalent to ‘the heart of God’), there may be complications since this aspect of human personality is often regarded as not being able to act on its own.

The solutions to the problem of ‘Spirit’ have been varied. In some languages the term for Spirit is essentially equivalent to ‘the unseen one,’ and therefore the Spirit of God is essentially equivalent to ‘the invisibleness of God.’

In a number of languages the closest equivalent for Spirit is ‘breath,’ and in a number of indigenous religious systems, the ‘breath’ is regarded as having a kind of independent existence. In other languages the term for Spirit is equivalent to what is often translated as ‘the soul,’ that is to say, the immaterial part of a person. There is, of course, always the difficulty of employing a term meaning ‘soul’ or ‘life,’ since it often proves to be impersonal and thus provides no basis for speaking of the Spirit of God as being a person or a personal manifestation of God. In quite a few languages the equivalent of Spirit is literally ‘shadow,’ since the ‘shadow’ of a person is regarded as the immaterial part of the individual. Moreover, in many systems of religious thought the shadow is regarded as having some significant measure of independent existence.

In a few cases the term for Spirit is literally ‘wind,’ but there are frequently difficulties involved in this type of terminology since a term for wind often suggests calamity or evil intent. One meaning of Spirit which must be clearly avoided is that of ‘apparition’ or ‘ghost.’

Frequently it is not possible to find a fully satisfactory term for ‘Spirit,’ and therefore in all contexts some characterizing feature is added, for example, either ‘of God’ or ‘holy,’ in the sense of ‘divine.’ This may be particularly necessary in a passage such as MRK 1:12 where the average reader might assume that a spirit which would make Jesus go out into the desert would be an evil rather than a good spirit.

Often the Holy Spirit is named by phrases which explain something of the nature and activity of the Spirit: πνεῦμα (ἐκ τοῦ) θεοῦ ‘Spirit of God,’ πνεῦμα ἅγιον ‘Holy Spirit,’ πνεῦμα αἰώνιον ‘the Eternal Spirit’ (often called ‘the unending spirit’ or ‘the spirit that never ceases’), πνεῦμα τῆς ἀληθείας ‘the Spirit of Truth,’ that is, ‘the Spirit who communicates truth’ (sometimes rendered as ‘the Spirit that communicates the truth about God’); πνεῦμα τῆς δόξης ‘Spirit of glory,’ that is, ‘the glorious Spirit’ or ‘the wonderful Spirit’; πνεῦμα τῆς ζωῆς ‘the Spirit of life,’ that is, ‘the Spirit who brings life’ or ‘the Spirit that causes people to live’; πνεῦμα υἰοθεσίας ‘the Spirit of sonship,’ that is, ‘the Spirit who makes us sons of God’ or ‘the Spirit that causes us to become God’s sons,’ πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος ‘Spirit of grace,’ that is, ‘the Spirit who bestows kindness’ or ‘the Spirit who shows kindness to us,’ πνεῦμα σοφίας καὶ ἀποκάλυψεως ‘Spirit of wisdom and revelation,’ that is ‘the Spirit who gives wisdom and who reveals God’ or ‘the Spirit who causes us to become wise and who shows us what God is like’ (or ‘... who God truly is’). The phrase πνεῦμα κυρίου, ‘Spirit of the Lord,’ is ambiguous because κύριος may either refer to God the Father or to Jesus Christ, but the Spirit in either case is the same: τί ὅτι συνεφωνήθη ὑμῖν πειράσαι τὸ πνεῦμα κυρίου; ‘why did you decide to put the Lord’s Spirit to the test?’ ACT 5:9.

spirit a supernatural non-material being πνεῦμα in JHN 4:24 and ACT 23:8 is highly generic. There is no implication of such a spirit being either good or evil, nor is πνεῦμα in such contexts to be regarded as merely an aspect of some other being. The reference is simply to a supernatural and non-material entity. In rendering ACT 23:8, one may speak of the Sadducees rejection of the existence of spirits as ‘they say ... there is nothing which isn’t physical’ or ‘... everything that exists is physical.’

demon, evil spirit an evil supernatural being or spirit While in a number of languages the Devil may be spoken of as ‘the chief of the demons,’ sometimes the demons are simply called ‘the spirits of the Devil’ or ‘the servants of the Devil.’

In a number of languages the difficulty in terminology for demons is not the absence of a term, but the abundance of different terms for different kinds of demons, each one of which may be responsible for particular kinds of human behavior, for example, insanity, depression, epilepsy, sex perversion, and violent assault. Sometimes demons are classified as ‘those of the home’ and ‘those of the forest,’ in which case the latter are normally regarded as more violent and virulent. When there is an abundance of different terms for demons and no generic term for all types of demons, one can usually select a class of demons which parallels most closely the descriptions of demon activity in the NT and use such a term with appropriate contextual qualifications so as to suggest that such a term is to be understood in a general sense.

ghost an apparition Most languages have quite satisfactory terms for ‘ghosts’ or ‘apparitions,’ since the psychological phenomena associated with such appearances are apparently universal. In some languages the equivalent of ‘ghost’ is simply ‘shadow.’ In other instances it may be literally ‘breath.’ In some instances the meaning of ‘ghost’ is incorporated within a verb expression, for example, ‘they saw, as it were, through him.’

The NT contains a number of lexical items (12.43-12.47) referring to supernatural powers believed to be active as elemental spirits exercising control over man’s fate. Though these may have certain special features associated with them and though in extrabiblical literature they may represent various grades of supernatural power, there seems to be no way in which they can be clearly distinguished on the basis of their NT usage. Appropriate equivalent expressions in other languages are extremely difficult to find, primarily because other religious systems usually have completely different beliefs relative to supernatural powers. In many languages it is simply not possible to speak of such supernatural powers without in some way identifying them with various kinds of spirits.

26.9 · Psychological Faculties spirit, spiritual, spiritual nature, inner being the non-material, psychological faculty which is potentially sensitive and responsive to God (Πνεῦμα[e] contrasts with σὰρξ[f], 26.7, as an expression of the divine in contrast with the purely human) A special problem is posed by the phrase Πνεῦμα ἁγιωσύνης in ROM 1:4. Some persons have assumed that this phrase is merely a lexical alternative for Πνεῦμα ἅγιον ‘Holy Spirit,’ but this hardly seems to be the case, especially since κατὰ Πνεῦμα ἁγιωσύνης is in structural contrast with κατὰ σάρκα (ROM 1:3). The phrase κατὰ σάρκα seems to be best interpreted as referring to the humanity of Jesus, and therefore in contrast κατὰ Πνεῦμα ἁγιωσύνης may perhaps be best interpreted as his ‘divine holiness’ or rather his ‘holy spiritual being.’ Accordingly, the relevant elements in ROM 1:3b-ROM 1:4 may be rendered as ‘as to his humanity, he was born a descendant of David, but as to his divine nature, he was shown with great power to be the Son of God by being raised from death.’

There are often a number of serious problems involved in obtaining a satisfactory term for translating Πνεῦμα[e]. In a few instances one can use a more or less literal equivalent, namely ‘breath,’ and in other instances the appropriate equivalent is a derived term meaning ‘that which doesn’t die.’ In some instances the equivalent is ‘the person who isn’t seen,’ meaning that part of the person which is never visible. In order to emphasize the non-material aspects of Πνεῦμα[e], some persons have used terms which actually refer to ghosts, but this should be avoided.

In a number of languages a clear distinction is made between (1) the spirit that dwells within a person during one’s lifetime and (2) that spirit which leaves a person and passes on into the next world. In a number of contexts one must make certain that the appropriate term is used; otherwise, there is not only extreme confusion but serious misunderstanding.

wind, blowing, to blow air in relatively rapid movement, but without specification as to the force of the movement As in the case of English (which has, for example, such terms as breeze, zephyr, gust, storm, whirlwind, cyclone, tornado, etc.), other languages likewise normally have a number of different terms depending upon the strength of the wind and whether the wind may be carrying substances such as sand or dust. In some languages there may also be a problem involved in the use of terms for ‘wind,’ since some of these may have meanings of malicious or malevolent spirits, or they may imply a disease-bringing event.

In PSA 104:4 the Hebrew actually means ‘you use the winds as your messengers.’ The form cited here in HEB 1:7 reflects the Septuagint translation. It may be relevant in some translations to call attention to the reason for this difference, since it may not be easy to make the Greek form of this expression fully meaningful, for literally ‘to turn his angels into winds’ may seem like purposeless magic. Some translators must employ a phrase such as ‘he makes his angels like winds.’

breath a breath of air coming from the lungs In this figurative context, πνεῦμα[h] refers to a single breath of air. It does not refer to the process of breathing (see πνοή[b] breath, 23.187). The use of breath to kill a person may immediately suggest in some languages the power of sorcery. It would be difficult indeed to avoid this connotation in view of the total context, but it may be necessary to have some type of marginal note explaining the symbolic significance.

demon, evil spirit (a fixed phrase equivalent in reference to πνεῦμα[c] ‘demon,’ 12.37, but with specific emphasis upon evil) a supernatural evil being There are a number of translational problems involved in rendering ‘evil spirits.’ In the first place, one must make certain that any characterization of ‘spirits’ as ‘wicked’ or ‘evil’ or ‘unclean’ will not be misunderstood as unduly restrictive. For example, if the term for ‘spirits’ itself indicates an evil supernatural being, then ‘evil spirits’ might suggest that there were both ‘evil demons’ as well as ‘good demons.’ The same would be true of an expression such as ‘unclean spirits.’

spiritual, from the Spirit (in reference to such matters as gifts, benefits, teachings, blessings, and religious songs) (derivative of πνεῦμα[a] 'Spirit,' 12.18) pertaining to being derived from or being about the Spirit, in reference to such matters as gifts, benefits, teachings, blessings, and religious songs In 1CO 2:13 πνευματικά may perhaps be best rendered in some languages as 'truths revealed by the Spirit' or possibly 'truths about the Spirit.' Some persons would insist, however, that in 1CO 2:13 πνευματικά refers to teachings which are of particular benefit or relevance to peoples spirits.

The occurrence of πνευματικός in EPH 1:3 and ROM 1:11 could be understood as referring to the human spirit, but the contexts would seem to point more clearly to the involvement of the Spirit of God. See 26.10.

It is also possible that in EPH 5:19 πνευματικαῖς means merely 'spiritual,' and as such pertains to what is 'sacred' or 'religious.' One can, therefore, translate ᾠδαῖς πνευματικαῖς as 'songs used in worship' or 'songs used in worship of God.' For a discussion of certain related problems involving the rendering of πνευματικός, see 26.10.

In ROM 15:27 (εἰ γὰρ τοῖς Πνευματικοῖς αὐτῶν ἐκοινώνησαν τὰ ἔθνη, ὀφείλουσιν καὶ ἐν τοῖς σαρκικοῖς λειτουργῆσαι αὐτοῖς), πνευματικός stands in contrast to σαρκικός[b] 'material' (79.1) and may therefore focus upon non-material or spiritual aspects of human personality or life in contrast with the physical aspects. Accordingly, one may translate ROM 15:27 as 'if the Gentiles shared in their spiritual benefits, they ought to help them with material things.' It is also possible, however, to understand πνευματικός in ROM 15:27 as referring to those blessings which come from the Holy Spirit (see 12.21) rather than those blessings which are for the human spirit. The terms πνευματικός, ψυχικός, σαρκικός, and σάρκινος reflect considerable overlapping in meaning; see also 26.8 and 79.1-79.6.

79.6 · Features of Objects · Natural [Human], Spiritual spiritual, supernatural pertaining to being supernatural and having its ultimate source in God In a number of languages this meaning of πνευματικός can only be reflected by a phrase such as ‘which comes from God’ or ‘provided by God.’

Collocation: τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς Πονηρίας ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις power, authority, lordship, ruler, wicked force (title for supernatural forces and powers) a supernatural power having some particular role in controlling the destiny and activities of human beings Some scholars have believed that it is possible to reconstruct at least in part some of the hierarchy represented by these various supernatural forces and powers, on the basis of the neoplatonic system of nine such powers arranged in three orders of three each. NT terminology and usage does not, however, lend itself to such a classification, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to determine what are the significant differences between these supernatural powers and forces. For the most part, translators have endeavored to render the various terms in somewhat different ways, for example, ἐξουσία as ‘authority’; δύναμις as ‘power’; κυριότης as ‘ruler’; and phrases such as τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς Πονηρίας ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις as ‘wicked spiritual forces in the heavenly world.’ In a number of languages, however, there are simply not enough terms to designate various kinds of powers, authorities, and forces which could be employed in speaking of such supernatural impersonal powers. Accordingly, some translators have simply used a phrase such as ‘any and all kinds of supernatural powers.’ Where it is possible to make certain lexical distinctions between terms and phrases, this, of course, should be done, but in a number of contexts this may be impossible, and accordingly, some explanation in a marginal note may be required if the reader is to understand satisfactorily the intent of the passages in question.

EPH 6:12

wind, blowing, to blow air in relatively rapid movement, but without specification as to the force of the movement As in the case of English (which has, for example, such terms as breeze, zephyr, gust, storm, whirlwind, cyclone, tornado, etc.), other languages likewise normally have a number of different terms depending upon the strength of the wind and whether the wind may be carrying substances such as sand or dust. In some languages there may also be a problem involved in the use of terms for ‘wind,’ since some of these may have meanings of malicious or malevolent spirits, or they may imply a disease-bringing event.

¹ In ROM 7:15 πράσσω (42.8) and ποιέω seem to be semantically interchangeable, but there may be some subtle stylistic distinction. ² Any meaning involving ‘to cause to be’ implies some change in state, and therefore one could classify these meanings under Subdomain B Change of State (Domain 13 Be, Become, Exist, Happen). However, the focus seems to be primarily upon the changed state rather than upon the process of moving from one state to another. The fact that a change of state has taken place seems to be semantically incidental. ³ By setting up certain highly generic meanings for βλάπτω, δίδωμι, ἀποδίδωμι, and ποιέω, it would be possible to treat the phrase compounds in this series as being semantically endocentric. However, it seems more satisfactory to regard them as what might be called low-grade idioms with specialized meanings of the semantically head expressions.

flock a collective for a group of sheep πρόβατον and/or goats αἴγιος In instances in which the reference is to a flock of sheep or goats, one can normally employ a designation for any group of animals, though there are often distinct terms for groups of domesticated animals in contrast with groups of wild animals. And in many languages there are a number of different terms for such groupings of animals depending upon the particular animals in question, for example, in English swarm, school, drove, pack, and bevy.

It may be possible in some instances to preserve something of the metaphorical value of these four terms by translating in some such manner as ‘take care of my people as you would sheep’ or ‘take care of my people, who are like sheep,’ or ‘take care of my helpless people,’ but frequently one can only translate as ‘take care of my people.’

city a population center of relatively greater importance (in contrast with κώμη[a] ‘village,’ 1.92, and κωμόπολις ‘town,’ 1.91), due to its size, economic significance, or political control over a surrounding area (it is possible that fortification of walls and gates also entered into the system of classification of a πόλις[b], in contrast with other terms for population centers) Most languages spoken by people in urbanized and industrialized societies have a number of terms for different types of population centers, for example, metropolis, city, town, village, hamlet, etc. For so-called tribal languages the primary means for making gradations consists of added attributives, for example, ‘a very large village,’ ‘a large village,’ ‘a village,’ ‘a small village.’ A translator must simply attempt to be as consistent as possible in referring to different types of population centers mentioned in the Scriptures.

¹ In contrast with MAT 11:21 in which Bethsaida is spoken of as a πόλις, in MRK 8:23 and MRK 8:26 Bethsaida is specifically referred to as a κώμη (1.92). This diversity may simply reflect a difference of usage between two authors. A similar distinction, however, exists also in the case of Bethlehem. In JHN 7:42 Bethlehem is called a κώμη, and in LUK 2:4, a πόλις. These differences can probably be attributed to differences in individual usage; that is to say, the distinctions in size between a πόλις and a κώμη were not fixed, or one author used πόλις in the generic sense in contrast with the specific sense. This does not affect the generic meaning of πόλις[a] as a population center in contrast with a rural area. ² It is possible that in the case of such meanings as τόπος[f] (11.59), πόλις[c] (11.61), κώμη[b] (11.62), and χώρα[e] (11.64) one should count on certain more or less automatic semantic rules by which the meaning of inhabitants could be derived by metonymy from expressions of place. Since, however, such metonymic developments are far from universal, the distinct meanings are listed here as a practical guide to translators. The same type of problem occurs with Ιεροσόλυμα ‘Jerusalem,’ Ἰουδαία ‘Judea,’ and περίχωρος ‘region’ in MAT 3:5.

11.68 · Groups and Classes of Persons and Members of Such Groups and Classes · Socio-Political citizen a person having full status as a member of a socio-political unit of people In a number of languages a citizen may be described as ‘a person who belongs to that country’ or ‘one who is a part of the people of that country’ or ‘one who is counted as a person of that country,’ but one could be a citizen of a country without necessarily living in such a geographical area.

In HEB 8:11 (καὶ οὐ μὴ διδάξωσιν ἕκαστος τὸν πολίτην αὐτοῦ ‘none of them will have to teach his fellow citizen’) πολίτης occurs with the possessive pronoun αὐτοῦ and hence is therefore equivalent to συμπολίτης (11.72) in meaning.

great, greatly, much, a great deal the upper range of a scale of extent, but probably somewhat less than for μέγας[b], μέγας, and μέγεθος (78.2) In MRK 3:12 πολλά indicates only degree, but it may be rendered in English as ‘sternly’ because part of the meaning of ἐπετίμα may be appropriately transferred to the adverbial attributive so as to express the extent and nature of the warning. In ACT 21:40 the phrase πολλῆς δὲ σιγῆς γενομένης refers to the fact that the crowd became very quiet. πολλῆς clearly indicates the degree of quietness, though in many languages one cannot speak of something being ‘very quiet’; on the contrary, such a state can only be described in terms of the absence of noise, for example, ‘when nobody was saying anything.’

5.6 · Foods and Condiments · Food

a drink liquids used for nourishment or to satisfy thirst Though in many languages the equivalent of πόσις and πόμα would be a verbal derivative meaning basically ‘that which is drunk,’ in other languages the equivalent may be ‘watery food’ or ‘liquid food.’

In some languages, one cannot refer to ‘blood’ (JHN 6:55) as being ‘drink,’ since blood is classified as food rather than as drink. On the other hand, it may be possible to translate ‘my blood is the real drink’ as ‘my blood is real nourishment.’ The expression ‘food and drink’ (HEB 9:10) may be better rendered in some languages as ‘all kinds of food.’

It may, therefore, be necessary to say in some languages ‘when men speak against you by saying that you have done wicked deeds.’

88.314 · Moral and Ethical Qualities and Related Behavior · Sin, Wrongdoing, Guilt guilty pertaining to guilt resulting from an evil deed In a number of languages it would be entirely misleading to speak of ‘a guilty conscience,’ for this would seem to imply that there is something sinful about the conscience itself. In reality, it is the conscience that says that a person is guilty, and therefore it may be necessary to translate HEB 10:22 as ‘with hearts that have been purified from a condition in which their conscience has said that they are guilty.’

verb | -ου

1.73 · Geographical Objects and Features · Bodies of Water

open sea, high sea, the deep, ocean the relatively deep area of the sea or ocean sufficiently far from land as to be beyond the range of any protection from the seacoast In order to designate the high sea or the ocean, it may be necessary in some instances to speak of ‘the sea far from land’ or ‘the sea out of sight of land.’ People who live near the ocean and are seafaring frequently have quite distinct terms for different conditions of the sea, whether, for example, it is stormy, moderately rough, or relatively calm. Languages may also use different terms in speaking of different areas of the sea or ocean. Note, for example, in English the use of China Sea, North Sea, Bering Sea, in contrast with Indian Ocean, Pacific Ocean, Atlantic Ocean. In English this contrast is relatively fixed, but it does reflect a gradation of size, since sea is used normally in speaking of smaller areas than is the case with ocean.

This word is found as a variant reading only: πᾶς ὁ ἐπὶ πόντον πλέων everyone sailing on the sea REV 18:17 (apparatus).

foot the part of the leg below the ankle on which a person or animal stands and moves In REV 10:1 (οί πόδες αὐτοῦ ὡς στῦλοι πυρός ‘his feet were like pillars of fire’) it is possible that πούς refers to the leg since the context of REV 10:1 would seem to favor this interpretation, but the meaning of ‘foot’ should not be excluded, especially since this passage refers to an image as part of a supernatural vision, and one cannot be certain of the specific intent.

Πραιτώριον

πραιτώριον (G4232)

noun, n. | -ου

7.7 · Constructions · Buildings

palace, fortress the dwelling of a king or ruler; usually larger and more elaborate than the dwelling of an average person There are differences of opinion as to the particular πραιτώριον mentioned in Jerusalem. It may have been either the palace of Herod in the western part of the city or the fortress Antonia northwest of the Temple area. The πραιτώριον in Caesarea was the palace built by Herod the Great (see ACT 23:35).

In the Gospels it is satisfactory to translate πραιτώριον[a] as ‘the palace where the governor lived’ or ‘the large dwelling where the ruler lived.’ In a number of languages a term for ‘palace’ often suggests a military fortification, and this would accordingly be quite appropriate for NT usage.

Πρασιά

Πρασιά (G4237)

noun, f. | -ᾶς | πράσσω

group (a figurative extension of meaning of πρασιά ‘garden plot,’ not occurring in the NT) a group of persons arranged in an orderly fashion A comparison of πρασιᾶι πρασιᾶι in MRK 6:40 with συμπόσια συμπόσια (see 11.5) in MRK 6:39 indicates clearly that the reference in both instances is essentially the same, but in MRK 6:39 συμπόσια συμπόσια points to the grouping of people with the intent of eating, while in MRK 6:40 πρασιᾶι πρασιᾶι marks the orderly arrangement of the persons. One may therefore translate MRK 6:40 as ‘the people sat down in orderly groups of a hundred and of fifty’ or ‘the people sat down in rows by groups of a hundred and groups of fifty.’

Sanhedrin, high council of the Jews the highest council of the Jews (see also συνέδριον[b] ‘Sanhedrin,’ the council of the Jews, 11.80) but with the implication of the maturity and relative advanced age of those constituting the membership of such a council¹

¹ Though γερουσία and πρεσβυτέριον[a] refer to the same council of the Jews as the term συνέδριον[b] (11.80), this does not mean that the three terms are completely identical in meaning. The focus upon maturity of age and judgment as well as presumed social standing are more significant factors in γερουσία and πρεσβυτέριον[a] than in συνέδριον[b].

4.22 · Animals · Animals

sheep herbivorous domestic mammal with four legs; Ovis laticaudata - fat-tailed sheep; used for sacrifice, source of meat, milk, hides, wool, and horns Since the distribution of sheep throughout the world is somewhat less than that of goats, there may be more difficulties involved in finding an adequate term. In some instances terms for sheep are actually based upon a term for goat. For example, among Eskimos goats are well known because there are wild goats in the mountains, and sheep are accordingly called in some dialects ‘woolly goats’ or ‘goats that have wool.’ Among the Maya in Yucatan sheep were introduced by the Spanish and were first described as being ‘cotton deer,’ and the name still persists.¹ In some areas where sheep are not known at all, the meat of sheep is known, and accordingly sheep may be called by the name of the meat, for example, ‘mutton animals.’ But in most places where sheep are not indigenous, there is nevertheless some term for them, usually based upon a borrowing from a dominant language.

For the translator, however, there are often problems involving the connotations of the term for sheep and for related expressions concerning their behavior and the ways in which they are ‘led.’ As already noted under the discussion of goats (4.19), sheep are frequently less prized than goats, and therefore it may seem strange in biblical texts to find sheep being given a preferential rating. What may appear even more difficult to understand is the suggestion that sheep are led by a shepherd rather than being driven. This fact may require some type of marginal note to accompany the text if people are to understand the basis for a number of similes and metaphors of the Scriptures. Furthermore, if the experience which people have of sheep is only their knowledge about wild sheep, then obviously references to the helplessness of sheep will be either meaningless or even contradictory. Again, a marginal note is in order.

adjc. | -ον | ὕω (rain)

14.14 · Physical Events and States · Rain

early rain, autumn rain a rain occurring early in the autumn, September or October, in contrast with normal rains occurring in the middle of the winter season See 14.13.

In Palestine the rainy season differs appreciably from what it is in many other parts of the world. In tropical regions north of the Equator, the rains occur primarily from May through October, and in the tropical regions below the Equator, the rains normally occur from November through April. The other seasons of the year are normally quite dry. In Palestine, however, rains occur primarily during the months of November through March, and the summer months are often without rain. Because of this significant difference in the time of rainfall, it may be important to relate the early and late rains not to particular times of the year but to the normal period for rain. For example, the early rains could be ‘rain coming before it is normally expected’ or ‘rain at the beginning of the rainy season,’ and late rains are ‘rains which come later than what one expects’ or ‘rain at the end of the rainy season.’ On the other hand, the contrast may be expressed as ‘rain coming before it should’ or ‘rain coming later than it should.’ It is difficult to relate early and late rains to so-called ‘growing seasons,’ since in the Middle East grains grow primarily during the rainy season and are harvested early in the spring, while fruits and vegetables are grown in the spring and summer with extensive use made of irrigation.

36.1 · (προϊσταμαι[a]) · Guide, Discipline, Follow · Guide, Lead to guide, to direct, to lead to so influence others as to cause them to follow a recommended course of action In some languages it is difficult to distinguish readily between expressions for 'leading' and those which refer to 'ruling' or 'governing,' but it is important to try to distinguish clearly between these two different sets of interpersonal relations. In some languages, the concept of 'leading' can be expressed by 'showing how to' or 'demonstrating how one ought to.' In other languages it is possible to speak of 'leading' as simply 'going ahead of,' but too often such an expression may designate only 'a scout' who goes ahead to see whether things are safe, or it may refer only to a person who insists on his prerogative as the most distinguished person in a group. The phrase 'in the Lord' in 1TH 5:12 probably refers to matters concerning the Christian life.

¹ ACT 26:14 The expression πρὸς κέντρα λακτίζειν ‘to kick against the goad’ is an idiom (see 39.19), but within the idiom πρὸς is to be understood in the sense of ‘against.’ The meaning of the idiom is to oppose, in one way or another, a dominant force. ² There are no doubt certain subtle distinctions in the meanings of the terms in 83.9 (μέσος[a], ἀνὰ μέσον, ἐντός[a], ἐν[b], μετά[h], εἰς[e], ἐπὶ[c], πρὸς[d], παρὰ[b]). For example, πρὸς[d] may suggest some kind of interaction or response and παρὰ[b] may focus upon association, but it is difficult, if not impossible, on the basis of existing contexts to define precisely the differences in meaning. ³ There are undoubtedly certain subtle distinctions of meaning associated with the various markers in 90.20, but it is impossible to determine those differences on the basis of existing contexts. ⁴ The series of expressions indicating relative shortness of time may very well differ slightly, at least in connotative meaning, but on the basis of existing NT contexts it is not possible to determine significant denotative differences. The phrases in this series (ἐν ὀλίγῳ, δι’ ὀλίγων, πρὸς ὀλίγον, διὰ βραχέων, μικρός[d]) may be technically regarded as idioms, but functionally they are better classed as frozen phrases, which act essentially like morphological units.

to undertake to join with, to seek association with to take the initiative in association with someone Though it is also true that Jews were not allowed to continue to associate with Gentiles, the focus of προσέρχομαι[b] in ACT 10:28 appears to be upon the initiative which could not be taken by a Jew in approaching a Gentile in order to be associated in some activity which would be contrary to ritual observances. προσέρχομαι in this context may therefore be rendered in some languages as 'to join arms with a Gentile,' 'to link oneself with a Gentile,' or 'to become a close friend of a Gentile.'

33.312 · (προσκαλέομαι[b]) · Communication · Call to call, to call to a task to urgently invite someone to accept responsibilities for a particular task, implying a new relationship to the one who does the calling¹ It is rare that one can translate καλέω[d], κλησιν[a], and προσκαλέω[b] as simply ‘to call’ in the sense of ‘to speak to someone at a distance and tell them to come.’ For example, in 2TH 2:14 it may be necessary to render the above clause as ‘through the good news we preached, which summoned you to do this.’ Similarly, in ACT 16:10 one may translate ‘because God has urgently invited us to preach the good news to the people there.’

MAT 10:1 · ACT 13:2 · ACT 16:10 · JAS 5:14

¹ It is possible that προσκαλέομαι[b] differs in meaning from καλέω[d] in emphasizing more specifically either the person who is called or the task to which one is called.

17.21 · Stances and Events Related to Stances · Prostrate as an Act of Reverence or Supplication to prostrate oneself before to prostrate oneself before someone as an act of reverence, fear, or supplication² προσκυνέω[b] is semantically very complex in that it indicates not only a body position but also an attitude and activity of reverence or honor. In many contexts it is not necessary to specify both semantic elements, but one or the other may be selected depending upon what seems to be the focus of attention. For example, in MRK 15:19 one may either translate ‘they knelt before him and worshiped him in a mocking way’ or ‘they knelt before him and prostrated themselves before him.’

MAT 8:2 · MAT 9:18 · MAT 15:25 · MAT 18:26 · MAT 20:20 · MRK 5:6 · MRK 15:19 · JHN 9:38 · ACT 10:25 · REV 3:9

¹ προσκυνέω[a] appears to differ somewhat in meaning from σέβομαισεβάζομαι, and εὐσεβέω[a] to worship (53.53) in emphasizing more the semantic component of position or attitude involved in worship. ² Προσκυνέω may involve the meaning of worship without reference to a prostrate position. For example, in HEB 11:21, προσεκύνησεν ἐπὶ τὸ ἄκρον τῆς ῥάβδου αὐτοῦ he leaned on the top of his walking stick and worshiped God, there is evidently no suggestion of a prostrate position, and this particular meaning of προσκυνέω is treated under Religious Activities (see 53.56).

verb | λαμβάνω

18.2 · (προσλαμβάνομαι[a]) · Attachment · Grasp, Hold to take hold of, to grasp to take hold of or grasp, with focus upon the goal of the motion In a number of languages quite different terms must be employed if one is to take someone by the hand in order to lead him or take someone by the hand in order to rescue him. The difference implied in the presumed force or strength required frequently results in quite different words being used.

The phrase προσλαμβάνομαι τροφῆς (ACT 27:36) may be interpreted as an idiom meaning ‘to eat’ (see footnote at μετέχω 23.2).

It may therefore be necessary in a number of languages to translate ‘to bow down low before’ or ‘to bow down to the ground before.’

¹ One may argue that the meaning of προσφάγιον in JHN 21:5 is relish, and that it is only the specialized context which makes possible the reference to fish. On the other hand, one may also argue that, as in the case of ὀψάριον (5.16), the term προσφάγιον has undergone a specialization of meaning, so that it no longer refers to any type of relish eaten with bread, but has the more specific meaning of fish as food.

to touch, to touch to help to touch something, with the intent of doing something about it In employing a term for ‘touch’ in LUK 11:46, it is important to use an expression which will imply ‘touching in order to relieve the burden.’ This may be done in some instances by translating ‘to help by touching’ or ‘to touch with a finger in order to help a little.’ For another interpretation of προσψάύω in LUK 11:46, see 24.75.

Προφήτης (G4396) — Προφηται

53.79 · Religious Activities · Roles and Functions prophet, inspired preacher one who proclaims inspired utterances on behalf of God¹ There is a tendency in a number of languages to translate προφήτης only in the sense of ‘one who foretells the future,’ but foretelling the future was only a relatively minor aspect of the prophet’s function, though gradually it became more important. Patristic authors defined the function of a prophet mainly in terms of foretelling the future. In New Testament times, however, the focus was upon the inspired utterance proclaimed on behalf of and on the authority of God. Accordingly, in a number of languages it is more appropriate to translate προφήτης as ‘one who speaks for God.’

morning star, bright star in the morning sky (an idiom, literally: morning star) a planet which is conspicuous in the morning sky (usually either Venus or Mars) In REV 2:28 the singular pronoun αὐτῷ refers to any and all of the persons in Thyatira, and therefore it is usually best rendered as plural. A literal rendering of REV 2:28 may be confusing, since it would suggest that God would be handing over the morning star to persons in Thyatira. A more satisfactory rendering may be 'I will cause the morning star to shine upon them' or possibly 'I will bring light into their hearts.'

adjc. | -ον | Πρωτεύω + τίκτω

firstborn pertaining to being a firstborn child (normally in contexts speaking of people but also used in reference to domestic animals) In Jewish society the rights and responsibilities of being a firstborn son resulted in considerable prestige and status. The firstborn son, for example, received twice as much in inheritance as any other offspring.

The use of πρωτότοκος ‘firstborn’ does not imply in Greek that other children were also born to a woman, though in a number of languages one would never use ‘firstborn’ unless other children followed. Such an individual would be spoken of merely as ‘the only child.’ It is also frequently necessary to employ an appropriate qualifier for ‘firstborn’ in order to mark clearly the fact that it is ‘a firstborn son’ rather than ‘a firstborn daughter.’

The figurative meaning of πρωτότοκος in the messianic title πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως ‘firstborn of all creation’ (COL 1:15 may be interpreted as ‘existing before all creation’ (see 13.79) or ‘existing superior to all creation’ (see 87.47).

For example, in some languages a term which includes all kinds of birds also includes flying insects and bats. However, since in most instances such a term has birds as its primary reference, it can usually be employed in contexts in which birds are more or less readily identified by other expressions in the passage. In other languages generic terms for birds may identify only certain classes of birds, for example, birds of prey, water birds, and birds of the forest.

Therefore, it may be necessary to translate ‘although Christ had previously possessed very much, he became one who possessed nothing and he did this for your sake.’

door, gate doors or gates used to close off entranceways πύλη[a] and πυλών[a] may refer to house doors and gates or to large doors and gates such as were used in a palace, temple, or in a city wall.

Note, however, that in ACT 14:13 the reference may not be specifically to the gates as objects, but to the entranceway into the city.

fire the light, flames, and heat produced by the burning of materials Though the ancient view of the elements would lead to classification of this occurrence of πῦρ (2PE 3:7) as referring to a natural substance, the fact that the reference is to a particular event means that in many languages one must speak of a ‘burning,’ and this must be expressed frequently by a verb or participle rather than by a noun, for example, ‘for destruction by being burned up.’

fire, bonfire a pile or heap of burning material The Greek phrase ἄψαντες ... πυράν ‘to kindle a fire’ is best rendered in a number of languages by a single verb meaning ‘to make a fire,’ and in some languages it is strange to speak of a ‘fire’ without indicating the type of material which is being burned. Hence, in ACT 28:2 the appropriate equivalent would be ‘they caused some sticks to burn.’

In some languages a very important distinction is made between two functionally different kinds of fire, one used for getting rid of refuse and the other used for warming oneself. Fire as a destructive agent, mentioned frequently in the book of Revelation (REV 8:5 and REV 20:10), may require quite a different term from what is used in speaking of a fire for the purpose of warming a person or heating an object.

to cause discord, to cause division (an idiom, literally: to throw fire) to cause discord and contention Some translators have preferred to retain the literal rendering of this expression in LUK 12:49, since this seems to be necessary in view of the larger figurative context, which speaks of ‘how I wish it were already kindled’ (τί θέλω εἰ ἤδη ἀνήφθῃ). A strictly literal translation may, however, be understood in a completely physical sense, namely, ‘to set the world on fire.’ There are a number of quite diverse interpretations of the significance of this expression in LUK 12:49. Some have assumed, for example, that it refers to the fire of Pentecost.

noun, m. | -ου

tower, watchtower a tall structure with a lookout at the top; made of stone; for guarding a vineyard or a settlement In the NT Πύργος may designate any type of tower, whether employed for military purposes or used by watchmen protecting a harvest.

Some scholars have suggested that in LUK 14:28 the reference to Πύργος is some kind of farm building, but this suggestion has been rejected by others.

In a number of languages a word for ‘tower’ is simply ‘a high building’ (though of course not a skyscraper). In other instances a tower may be more appropriately described as ‘a high platform’ or ‘a high lookout place.’

14.63 · (Πυρόομαι[a]) · Physical Events and States · Burning to burn, burning, to be on fire the process of burning In a number of languages important distinctions are made in the use of terms for burning. For example, the burning of a substance for light, as in the case of a lamp or candle, may be indicated by a term quite different from an expression indicating the destruction or burning up of something. Similarly, the burning of wood for cooking may require still another term. The extent or size of the fire involved may also require some distinctions in terms for burning.

In a number of languages it is extremely difficult to indicate burning as means simply by a phrase such as 'by burning.' Normally, burning can only be referred to by means of an expression referring to fire. Accordingly, 2PE 3:12 may be rendered as 'a great fire will destroy the sky and will cause the elements to melt'; likewise, in ACT 28:2 one may translate 'in the end a great fire will destroy the earth.'

to sell to dispose of property or provide services in exchange for money or other valuable considerations πιπράσκω and ἀποδίδωμαι (ἀποδίδωμι[e]) may also be used to refer to selling a person into slavery. Note, for example, πιπράσκω in MAT 18:25 (ἐκέλευσεν αὐτὸν ὁ κύριος πρᾶθῃναι ‘his master ordered him to be sold as a slave’) and ἀποδίδωμαι in ACT 7:9 (οἱ πατριάρχαι ζηλώσαντες τὸν Ἰωσήφ ἀπέδοντο εἰς Αἴγυπτον ‘the patriarchs were jealous of Joseph and sold him to be a slave in Egypt’).

In a number of languages, however, it may be important to use a distinctive term for selling a person into slavery. In fact, it may be necessary to describe the event rather explicitly, for example, ‘to receive money for handing a person over to someone else to be a slave.’

In ROM 7:14 πιπράσκω is used figuratively in the phrase πεπραμένος ὑπὸ τὴν ἁμαρτίαν ‘sold as a slave to sin,’ in the sense that sin is personified as the master.
