σαβαχθάνι

σαβαχθάνι

σαβαχθάνι (G4518) — σαβαχθανι

verb (Aramaic loanword)

35.56 · Help, Care For · Desert, Forsake to forsake an Aramaic word meaning: you have forsaken me Languages differ appreciably in expressions meaning ‘to forsake, to abandon.’ For example, the most appropriate equivalent in some instances is ‘to leave alone’ or ‘to leave behind.’ In other instances one may employ a phrase such as ‘to leave without help’ or ‘to leave and refuse to care for.’

week a period of seven days In some languages it may be better to render LUK 18:12 as simply ‘for every seven days, I fast two days.’ For the expression ‘the first day of the week,’ there may be a number of complications, especially since in present-day usage Monday is often regarded as ‘the first day of the week.’ For the NT, of course, the Sabbath Day, or ‘Saturday,’ marked the seventh day of the week and the next day would be regarded as ‘the first day of the week,’ namely, Sunday.

σαλεύω

σαλεύω (G4531) — σαλεύομαι

verb | ἄλλομαι

16.7 · Non-Linear Movement

to shake to cause something to move back and forth rapidly, often violently In some languages there are quite distinct terms for shaking, depending upon the vigor of the motion and/or the objects which are shaken. Accordingly, one must exercise care in selecting terms which will accurately and adequately represent the nature of the shaking in the various contexts. For example, in HEB 12:26 the shaking would presumably involve some kind of reverberation, but in REV 6:13 the action of the wind suggests whipping something back and forth.

It is possible to interpret σαλεύω in MAT 24:29 (αἱ δυνάμεις τῶν οὐρανῶν σαλευθήσονται 'the hosts of heaven will be shaken') as meaning literal shaking, but it may be used figuratively in the sense of deposing the hosts of heaven from their positions of power.

6.93 · Artifacts · Musical Instruments trumpet blast, trumpet sound (derivative of σαλπίζω[a] ‘to play the trumpet,’ 6.90) the sound made by a trumpet¹ With both σαλπίζω[b] (6.92) and σάλπιγξ[b], it may be necessary to introduce an agent, even though indefinite. For example, ἐν τῇ ἐσχάτῳ σάλπιγγι may be translated as ‘when someone blows the trumpet for the last time,’ and σαλπίζει may be rendered as ‘when someone sounds the trumpet’ or ‘when someone produces a noise on the trumpet.’ However, any term for ‘noise’ should imply a meaningful sound.

MAT 24:31 · 1CO 15:52 · 1TH 4:16 · HEB 12:19

¹ Though it would seem logical to regard σάλπιγξ[b] as a derivative of σάλπιγξ[a] (6.89) in view of the formal similarity, nevertheless from the standpoint of the semantic components involved, σάλπιγξ[b] is actually related to the verb σαλπίζω[a] meaning to play the trumpet (6.90) or possibly σαλπίζω[b] to sound a trumpet (6.92). σάλπιγξ[b] definitely relates to the result of an event, not simply to the instrument employed in such an event.

65.28 · Value · Good, Bad bad, diseased and possibly seedling pertaining to being of poor or bad quality and hence of little or no value (particularly in reference to plants, either in the sense of seriously diseased or of seedling stock, that is, not budded or grafted) Some scholars have suggested that σαπρός in MAT 7:18 really refers to a seedling, that is to say, a tree which has grown up completely from seed rather than being budded or grafted. Seedling trees often produce tasteless or even bitter fruit. By its very nature, such a tree cannot produce good fruit and is, therefore, considered to be of no value.

body, physical body a living body¹ Though the reference of σάρξ in 1Ti 3:16 is to the physical body, it may be necessary in some instances to translate this as ‘a human being’ or ‘a person,’ that is to say, ‘Christ appeared as a human being’ or ‘Christ became a person.’ Otherwise, the reader might assume that Christ took on the body of someone else or merely indwelt some miraculous human form rather than actually became a human being

In some instances, however, one might use an expression such as ‘our own fathers,’ so as to provide an implied contrast with the heavenly Father. Where it is necessary to qualify the term ‘fathers,’ one may use an expression such as ‘fathers which caused us to be conceived.’

race, ethnic group, nation a relatively large group of persons regarded as being biologically related² It may be difficult in some languages to clearly distinguish between culture and race as in MRK 7:26. Sometimes this difference can be indicated by saying ‘the woman lived like a Greek, but she was a Syrophoenician’ or ‘... her parents were from Syrophoenicia.’ In translating ‘people of my own race’ in ROM 11:14, it may be necessary to say ‘all my fellow Jews’ or ‘all those people of whom I am a part’ or ‘those people who are my roots’ or ‘... my trunk,’ based on the analogy of a tree trunk and branches.

26.7 · Psychological Faculties human nature, human aspects, natural, human the psychological aspect of human nature which contrasts with the spiritual nature; in other words, that aspect of human nature which is characterized by or reflects typical human reasoning and desires in contrast with those aspects of human thought and behavior which relate to God and the spiritual life Some scholars understand the meaning of σάρξ[f] as being a person’s lower nature rather than simply human nature, but the distinction between lower nature and higher nature seems to be primarily one arising out of typical Greek thought rather than out of the Semitic background which seems to be so pervasive in the use of the term σάρξ in NT contexts such as 1CO 1:26. There are, of course, contexts in which σάρξ does refer to that psychological factor in man which serves as a willing instrument of sin and is subject to sin.

¹ It is possible that σάρξ[b] differs in meaning from σῶμα[a] (8.1) in focussing somewhat more upon the physical nature. ² πατριὰ[a] and φυλή[b] nation, people (11.56) focus attention upon a particular people as a socially functioning unit, while the feature of biological descent is largely secondary. But in the case of γένος[b] and σάρξ[e], the feature of biological descent is focal, while group functioning is largely secondary. ³ In this subdomain (Human Beings) a number of expressions referring to people are based upon metonymies involving terms for parts or aspects of persons. Such metonymic figures of speech are involved in σὰρξ καὶ αἷμα (9.14), γόνυ[b] (9.16), χεὶρ[b] (9.17), γλῶσσα[g] (9.18), ὄνομα[b] (9.19), and ψυχή[c] (9.20).

12.34 · Supernatural Beings and Powers · Supernatural Beings

Devil, Satan (a borrowing from Hebrew and Aramaic: a title for the Devil, literally: adversary) the principal supernatural evil being¹ In a number of languages there is a well known proper name for the Devil as the chief of all demons. In other instances, however, he is given a descriptive name, for example, ‘the ruler of the evil spirits,’ ‘the chief of the demons,’ ‘the truly bad one,’ ‘the left-handed one’ (as the one who is opposed to all which is right or correct), ‘the no-good one,’ ‘the avaricious one.’ In some instances a term for the Devil may be highly idiomatic as, for example, ‘the barking one,’ a reference to the Devil’s presumed activity in animal guise.

Some translators have employed for ‘Devil’ the proper name Satan, but this is often not a satisfactory solution. In one language in West Africa, for example, the term Satan had already been borrowed but was understood in the sense of the culture hero of the people and not as a designation for the chief of demons.

At the same time, certain difficulties may occur in some passages. For example, in LUK 21:25 it may be misleading to speak of signs occurring 'in the moon,' for this might mean 'inside the moon.' TEV has resolved the problem somewhat by translating "there will be strange things happening to the sun, the moon, and the stars." noun, n. | -ον | σημαίνω sign an event which is regarded as having some special meaning In translating σημεῖον in MAT 24:3, it may be necessary in some languages to say ‘tell us what will happen that will show that you are coming’ or ‘tell us what we will see that will make us know that you are coming.’

σημεῖον as an event with special meaning was inevitably an unusual or even miraculous type of occurrence, and in a number of contexts σημεῖον may be rendered as ‘miracle.’ Certainly that is the referent of the term σημεῖον in JHN 2:23 (πολλοὶ ἐπίστευσαν εἰς τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ θεωροῦντες αὐτοῦ τὰ σημεία ἃ ἐποίει ‘many believed in him as they saw the signs he did’). For the Gospel of John, however, a σημεῖον is not simply a miraculous event but something which points to a reality with even greater significance. A strictly literal translation of σημεῖον as ‘sign’ might mean nothing more than a road sign or a sign on a building, and therefore in some languages σημεῖον in a context such as JHN 2:23 may be rendered as ‘a miracle with great meaning.’

23.205 · Physiological Processes and States · Rot, Decay to rot, to decay, decay to rot or decay, in reference to organic matter There may be problems involved in a literal rendering of JAS 5:2 because it may seem strange to speak of ‘riches rotting,’ since a term for ‘riches’ is likely to refer primarily to money. It may therefore be necessary to translate ‘the things that make you rich’ or ‘all the things you have as a rich person.’

4.49 · Animals · Insects

moth smallish brown or gray moth that lays eggs in clothing or other cloth; eggs hatch into very small caterpillars, which feed on the fibers; Tineidae family, probably Tineola biselliella; symbols of decay, ruin, and slow destruction In the NT the Greek term σής is used only in reference to the larvae of moths, and therefore it is frequently necessary to employ a term in the receptor language for the larvae rather than for the flying insect. This means that frequently an appropriate equivalent is ‘the worms of moths,’ but often one can employ an expression which means simply ‘cloth worms’ or ‘cloth eaters.’

In MAT 6:19 MAT 6:20 LUK 12:33 the effect of the larvae of moths is combined with rust as agents for the destruction of valuable objects. It is rare, however, that one can speak of the destruction caused by moths in the same way as one can describe the effects of rust or tarnish. It may therefore be necessary to talk about ‘moths eating cloth,’ while ‘tarnish ruins precious metal.’

mustard plant mustard plant, a large herb noted for its very small seeds and in some instances growing to a height of three meters (about ten feet) Note that in MAT 13:31 (and in the parallel passage LUK 13:19) σίναπι is actually spoken of as a δένδρον tree, evidently a type of rhetorical hyperbole.

Though the mustard plant may not be known in certain areas of the world, the use of mustard as a condiment is widely known, and therefore it is often possible to speak of ‘a plant that produces mustard’ or ‘the plant used in making mustard.’ In order, however, to make the parable meaningful, it may be necessary to have some explanation of this plant in a footnote or glossary.

to sift to sift by shaking in a sieve The expression ὑμᾶς τοῦ σινιάσαι ὡς τὸν σῖτον in LUK 22:31 is clearly a type of figurative usage and in many languages must be translated as ‘to test you’ or ‘to test you so as to separate the good from the bad.’ In some languages, however, it may be more satisfactory to shift the figure from sifting to winnowing and hence translate ‘to winnow you like a farmer who separates the wheat from the chaff.’

LUK 22:31¹

¹ LUK 22:31 In LUK 22:31 the expression ὑμᾶς τοῦ σινιάσαι ὡς τὸν σῖτον ‘to sift you like wheat’ is semantically complex, for σινιάσαι ὡς τὸν σῖτον ‘to sift like wheat’ must be taken in a literal sense, but when used with the object ὑμᾶς ‘you’ (plural), obviously it is not wheat which is involved, but persons, and therefore the meaning must relate to some type of testing of actions and/or motivations. It is impossible to determine whether the expression σινιάσαι ὡς τὸν σῖτον had actually become an established idiom.

σιρός

σιρός — σειρός

noun, f. | -οῦ

1.59 · Geographical Objects and Features · Depressions and Holes pit, deep hole This word is found as a variant reading only: ἀλλὰ σιροῖς ζόφου ταρταρώσας παρέδωκεν εἰς κρίσιν τηρουμένους ‘but cast them into hell and committed them to the pits of intense gloom to be kept until the judgment’ 2PE 2:4 (apparatus; the text of 2PE 2:4 reads σειρά ‘chain,’ 6.15). In this one occurrence of σιρός in the NT, the pit in question is a place of imprisonment until the time of judgment. The expression ‘the pits of intense gloom’ may be translated as ‘pits where it is extremely dark.’

Though most scholars have interpreted σιρός as being equivalent to ἄβυσσος (1.20), others see a distinction. But there is a danger in attempting to make too many fine distinctions between the meanings of such biblical terms. There is little evidence that biblical writers used such expressions with the same degree of differentiation which some persons would like to find.

On the basis of this one NT occurrence it is impossible to know whether the meaning of σιτία is ‘grain’ or ‘food,’ since in the phrase σιτία καὶ ποτὰ ‘food and drink’ (an expression occurring in a number of extrabiblical contexts), the term σιτίον contrasts solid with liquid nourishment.

While in some parts of the world wheat as a grain or as a plant is not known, in almost all instances people are acquainted with wheat flour, and therefore it is often possible to translate ‘wheat’ as ‘flour plant’ or ‘plant the grain of which is used to make flour.’ In some languages, however, the only possible equivalent is ‘rice-like plant’ in which ‘rice-like’ means essentially ‘grass-like,’ while at the same time indicating edible grain.

As a result, in a number of languages the three terms are reduced often to two, for example, ‘snare’ and ‘trap.’ If there are three different kinds of traps, then, of course, three terms can be used. In some cases, however, it may be preferable to use verbs to express the catching and trapping, and thus one may translate γενηθήτω ἡ τράπεζα αὐτῶν εἰς Παγίδα καὶ εἰς θήραν καὶ εἰς σκάνδαλον as in TEV, “may they be caught and trapped at their feasts; may they fall.”

object, thing any kind of instrument, tool, weapon, equipment, container, or property The manner in which σκεῦος[a] is translated depends in many instances upon the specific context. It may, of course, be rendered by a highly generic expression such as English ‘thing,’ but wherever the context refers to some particular type of object, it is preferable to employ a specific referent. In ACT 27:17, for example, the reference of σκεῦος is generally understood to be the mainsail.

In a number of languages there is no relatively high generic term which may be used to refer to any type of vessel or container, and therefore one must employ more specific terms depending upon the context, even as in the case of most English translations in ACT 10:11, REV 2:27, and LUK 8:16.

A further alternative meaning, and one closely related to the meaning of 'body' is 'sexual life,' so that this expression in 1TH 4:4 might be rendered as 'each of you must gain mastery over his sexual life' or, in the form τὸ ἑαυτοῦ σκεῦος κτᾶσθαι ἐν ἀγιασμῷ καὶ τιμῇ, 'your sexual life should be holy and honorable' (see 23.63).

10.55 · Kinship Terms · Kinship Relations Based upon Marriage

wife (a figurative extension of meaning of σκεῦος[b] 'vessel,' 6.118) a woman married to a man, with focus upon the sexual relation The interpretation of σκεῦος in 1TH 4:4 has given rise to serious divisions of opinion as noted in 8.6, where σκεῦος is interpreted as designating a person's own body. The interpretation of σκεῦος as 'wife' is based upon a number of considerations. In the first place, the verb κτᾶσθαι 'to get, to acquire' (57.58) does not normally go with 'body,' while it fits well with the meaning of 'wife.' On the other hand, σκεῦος meaning 'wife' is nowhere else attested in Greek but is assumed in 1TH 4:4 to refer to a wife primarily on the strength of the particular interpretation of the context, in which πορνεία 'immorality' (88.271) in verse 3 and ἐν πάθει ἐπιθυμίας 'with a lustful desire' (25.30) in verse 5 are assumed to point to the meaning of σκεῦος as 'wife.' In ancient Jewish literature a wife was euphemistically called a 'vessel' in contexts relating to sexual relations, and 'vessel' is a very common meaning of σκεῦος in Greek. If, therefore, one assumes a Semitic background for this Greek text, the statement in 1TH 4:4 would refer to the need for sexual life to be both holy and honorable (see 23.63).

to take up residence, to come to reside, to come to dwell to come to dwell in a place defined psychologically or spiritually (with the possible implication in some contexts of a temporary arrangement) In all of these contexts, σκηνώω and ἐπισκηνώω are essentially figurative in meaning, for they deal with spiritual existence and residence rather than human residence or dwelling. In translating one should, in so far as possible, try to preserve this important figurative relationship, since it expresses one of the most significant ways in which spiritual and human existence can be combined. In some languages, however, it may be necessary to employ an expression which means simply ‘to be in’ or ‘to continue with,’ since expressions for ‘living’ or ‘dwelling’ may be based upon terms which are too specific in meaning, for example, ‘to eat from the same pot’ or ‘to enter by the same door.’

dwelling a dwelling, with the implication of temporary duration In ACT 7:46 there is a complex textual problem in which the critical text has τῷ οἴκῳ Ἰακώβ ‘the house of Jacob’ (but in the figurative sense of ‘people’), but the Byzantine text reads τῷ θεῷ Ἰακώβ ‘the God of Jacob.’ It is only with this latter form of the text that σκήνωμα would mean an actual construction or dwelling. If one adopts the form of the critical text, then σκήνωμα would point to ‘a place to dwell,’ in other words, an area or region (see 85.77).

shade shade, as a shelter from light and the heat associated with light A term for ‘shade’ as an area sheltered from the direct rays of the sun usually differs from a term for ‘shadow,’ which is cast by a particular object blocking rays of light (see 14.61).

MRK 4:32

14.61 · Physical Events and States · Darkness

shadow the shape or shade cast by an object which blocks rays of light In LUK 1:79 (τοῖς ἐν σκότει καὶ σκιᾷ θανάτου καθημένοις ‘those living in the darkness and shadow of death’), σκιᾶ may be interpreted as being used figuratively of a shadow cast by impending death, that is to say, death is personified in such a way as to suggest that it casts a shadow because of its nearness. One may, therefore, translate τοῖς ἐν σκότει καὶ σκιᾷ θανάτου καθημένοις as ‘those who live in the darkness of impending death,’ in which case σκιᾶ becomes essentially equivalent to an expression of time.

In a number of languages a term for ‘shadow’ has a number of very important meanings. In some instances it is regarded as a part of personality which goes on to the next world, since a dead person no longer ‘casts a shadow.’ The shadow may also be regarded as a kind of counterpart of the personality, a type of alter ego. In cases of severe illness one may say ‘his shadow has walked away,’ and in many parts of the world the shadow of a person is an important element in the practice of black magic, for to damage a shadow may be regarded as a means of causing harm to a person.

15.243 · Linear Movement · Jump, Leap to jump for joy, to leap for joy to leap or jump, as a possible expression of joy and happiness For a difference of semantic focus see 25.134).

In LUK 1:41 σκιρτάω may be regarded as an instance of figurative usage: ἐσκίρτησεν τὸ βρέφος ἐν τῇ κοιλίᾳ αὐτῆς ‘the baby leaped for joy in her womb.’

Though it may seem quite natural to speak of ‘leaping for joy,’ in some cultures this would not be a meaningful combination of words, for leaping might suggest anger, ritual exorcism (driving out demons), or preparation for war. It may, therefore, be necessary in some languages to translate ‘jump for joy’ merely as ‘be exceedingly glad.’ It may be particularly awkward to speak of a fetus jumping in the womb, for obviously it would simply be a rapid movement of the limbs and not actual change of location. Therefore, it may be better to translate in some instances ‘moved quickly to show joy’ or ‘... as a sign of happiness.’

LUK 1:41 · LUK 1:44 · LUK 6:23

25.134 · Attitudes and Emotions · Happy, Glad, Joyful to sow to scatter seed over tilled ground¹ In many languages there is a problem of translating σπείρω literally as 'to scatter seed,' since this is interpreted as an exceedingly wasteful manner of sowing, but unless one translates more or less literally and then provides some explanatory footnote, the parable loses much of its significance for many cultures.

27.19 · Learn · Learn ignorant show-off, charlatan (a figurative extension of meaning of a term based on the practice of birds in picking up seeds) one who acquires bits and pieces of relatively extraneous information and proceeds to pass them on with pretense and show The term σΠερμολόγος is semantically complex in that it combines two quite distinct phases of activity: (1) the acquiring of information and (2) the passing on of such information. Because of the complex semantic structure of σΠερμολόγος, it may be best in some languages to render it as ‘one who learns lots of trivial things and wants to tell everyone about his knowledge,’ but in most languages there is a perfectly appropriate idiom for ‘a pseudo-intellectual who insists on spouting off.’ For a different focus on the meaning of σΠερμολόγος in ACT 17:18, see 33.381.

cave, den, hideout a cave or den generally large enough for at least temporary occupation by persons (since such places were often used for habitation or refuge by those who were refugees or thieves, σπήλαιον has in certain contexts the connotation of a ‘hideout’) In REV 6:15 the reference of σπήλαιον is literal, since people actually hid themselves in such caves. In MAT 21:13, however, the reference is to the Temple, which has been made a kind of ‘cave’ or ‘den,’ and since the connotation of the term suggests a ‘hideout,’ this is obviously a reflection upon the activities and motivations of those who had commercialized the Temple in Jerusalem.

heart, feelings, desires (figurative extension of meaning of σπλάγχνον[a] ‘intestines,’ 8.58) the psychological faculty of desire, intent, and feeling¹ Though some persons have attempted to distinguish between σπλάγχνον[b], κοιλία[c], and νεφρός, it is extremely doubtful whether this is really possible or practical. The semantic focus in the use of these terms is clearly the deeper and more intimate feelings and emotions. In some languages one can use a term which literally means ‘belly’ or ‘bowels,’ but more often than not, these emotions are associated with some particular organ of the body such as heart, spleen, liver, etc. Rather, however, than attempting to employ a figurative expression which may or may not be fully equivalent, it is often preferable to refer to the emotional content by using terms such as ‘feelings,’ ‘intents,’ ‘desires,’ or ‘compassion,’ depending upon the context.

cross a pole stuck into the ground in an upright position with a crosspiece attached to its upper part; used as a means of execution In MAT 27:32 (τοῦτον ἡγγάρευσαν ἵνα ἄρῃ τὸν σταυρὸν αὐτοῦ ‘they forced him to carry Jesus’ cross’) the reference is probably to the crosspiece of the cross, which normally would have been carried by a man condemned to die.

Because of the symbolism associated with the cross, translations of the NT in all languages preserve some expression which will identify the cross, not only as a means of capital punishment, but as having a particular form, namely, an upright pole with a crossbeam. In some receptor languages the term for a cross means simply ‘crossbeam.’ In other instances it is composed of a phrase meaning ‘crossed poles.’ It is important, however, to avoid an expression which will suggest crossed sticks in the form of X rather than a cross consisting of an upright with a horizontal beam. If at all possible one should employ a term or phrase which may be used in an extended sense, since in so many contexts the term ‘cross’ refers not only to the instrument of Christ’s death, but to the event of execution. It also becomes a symbol of the message of forgiveness and of reconciliation. Because of these extended meanings, it is important to choose a form which can, if at all possible, support these additional meanings.

to crucify to execute someone by nailing that person to a cross It is rare that one can find in receptor languages a technical term or phrase meaning specifically ‘to crucify.’ In general, a phrase must be employed, since this type of execution is no longer practiced. One can, for example, use such expressions as ‘to nail to a cross bar’ or ‘to nail up on wood’ or even ‘to nail up high.’

3.38 · Plants · Fruit Parts of Plants grape, bunch of grapes the small round fruit, sweet and juicy, of a creeping plant that develops a woody stem when it matures; Vitis vinifera; symbol of blessing, prosperity, and happiness Some scholars have contended that βότρυς means primarily a bunch of grapes, while σταφυλή designates individual grapes. In REV 14:18 this difference might seem plausible, but there is scarcely any evidence for such a distinction, since both words may signify grapes as well as bunches of grapes.

In some languages it is necessary to borrow a term for ‘grapes’ from a dominant language and then employ some kind of classifier, for example, ‘fruit called grapes.’ In other languages grapes may be known as ‘wine fruit,’ since wine may be more widely known than a term for grapes.

mark, scar something on the surface of an object, for example, line, spot, or scar, without special design but carrying significance² A strictly literal translation of GAL 6:17 might suggest that Paul had the same marks on his hands, feet, and side as Jesus had, but this is evidently not the meaning of the statement in GAL 6:17. It is possible, of course, that since Paul was whipped much the same way that Jesus was whipped, he (Paul) would bear such scars on his back, but a more satisfactory rendering of GAL 6:17 would probably be ‘for I have on my body scars indicating that I belong to Jesus.’ For other interpretations of στίγμα in GAL 6:17, see 8.55 and 90.84.

¹ Properly speaking, στίγμα[a] (8.55) and τύπος[a] (8.56) are not body parts, but may refer to features of the body which may result from some external force or object and could accordingly be classified in Domain 19 Physical Impact. They are, however, included at this point because they may refer to types of scars, which become a permanent feature of the body. ² στίγμα[b] differs from στίγμα[a] (8.55) in that the significance of the scar is not the physical object as such but the meaning which the scar carries.

soldier a person of ordinary rank in an army In some languages the normal equivalent of στρατιώτης would be ‘one who carries a gun,’ but such an expression would be completely anachronistic. Some translators have attempted to substitute a phrase such as ‘one who carries a sword,’ but this has failed in most cases since it suggests merely individual violence instead of organized warfare. It may therefore be important to use a phrase such as ‘one who fights under command’ or ‘one who is charged by the rulers to fight.’

to turn to, to come to believe, to come to accept to change one’s belief, with focus upon that to which one turns In analyzing the meaning of στρέφω[g], ἐπιστρέφω[b], and ἐπιστροφή[a] in such passages as MAT 18:3, JHN 12:40, and ACT 7:39, it is difficult to determine the extent to which belief or behavior is primarily in focus. In the case of 1PE 2:25, one could certainly argue that the emphasis is upon the interpersonal relationship. It is therefore essential in rendering these terms not to narrow the meaning too much, for in this way one would certainly do violence to certain crucial semantic features.

¹ There are certain technical problems involved in treating the series καθέζομαι, κάθηναι[a], καθίζω[a] (17.12) and συγκάθηναι, συγκαθίζω[a] (17.13), since there appears to be an alternation in meaning between (1) being in a position and (2) assuming such a position. It would be possible to set up two distinct meanings or to assume that the respective forms are essentially ambiguous. In general, however, the participial forms indicate a state of being, while the non-participial forms imply assuming a particular position of being seated. However, there are certain subtle differences in the tenses of the participial forms, and hence one cannot determine precisely what are the referential distinctions.

34.1 · Association · Associate to associate, to be in the company of, to be involved with, association to associate with one another, normally involving spacial proximity and/or joint activity, and usually implying some kind of reciprocal relation or involvement In translating terms referring to association, one may employ a number of different kinds of expressions, for example, ‘to have something to do with,’ ‘to keep company with,’ ‘to go around with,’ ‘to join in doing things together,’ or ‘to become a companion of.’ Sometimes association is spoken of in terms of the impression made upon others, for example, ‘to be seen often together,’ ‘to be regarded as close friends,’ and even idiomatically as ‘to be another person’s shadow.’

Some scholars interpret συγχρόομαι in JHN 4:9 as denoting the use of the same dishes or utensils, so that one may translate this expression in JHN 4:9 as ‘Jews do not use dishes together with Samaritans’ or ‘Jews and Samaritans do not use the same dishes.’ Such an interpretation, however, is based upon etymological arguments for which there seems to be no certain justification in general Greek usage.

συζωοποιέω

συζωοποιέω (G4806)

verb | ζάω + ποιέω

to raise to life together with to cause to live again together with others There are serious semantic difficulties involved in a literal translation of συνεγείρω or συζωοποιέω, for a literal rendering could either be interpreted as ‘to be raised to life at the same time with’ or ‘to be raised to life in the same way as,’ but the reference in COL 3:1 and EPH 2:5 is to a spiritual existence more than to a literal resurrection of the body. This means that both συνεγείρω and συζωοποιέω must be understood as highly figurative. Hence, in COL 3:1 it may be necessary to translate εἰ οὖν συνεγέρθητε τῷ Χριστῷ as ‘since you have been raised to life, so to speak, with Christ’ or ‘since, as it were, you have been raised to life with Christ.’ In this way one may point to the fact of a figurative element involved.

mulberry tree a deciduous fruit tree growing to about 6 m; produces black berries containing a sweet reddish juice For languages which have no specific term for ‘mulberry tree,’ one can often employ a generic expression followed by a type of classifier, for example, ‘the tree called mulberry’ (in which case the term ‘mulberry’ may be borrowed from a dominant language of the area) or ‘a tree producing berries’; but in LUK 17:6 the focus is upon the tree as a large object and not upon the type of fruit which it produced. One can, therefore, say simply ‘this tree.’

fig tree fruit tree; grows 5–8 m high; round crown and very deep roots; Ficus carica; fruit is about the size of a hen’s egg and can be green, yellow, purple, or brown depending on the type, and is sweet and soft In Palestine the fig tree occurs in both wild and cultivated forms and the latter is greatly valued for its sweet, edible fruit. It normally produces two crops each year: early figs ripening in June (late spring) and late ones in August and September (early fall).

For languages in which a term for ‘fig tree’ is not known, one can often employ a borrowed term with a so-called ‘classifier,’ for example, ‘a tree called fig’ or ‘a fruit tree producing fruit called figs.’ In many tropical areas of the world there are forest trees belonging to the botanical family of fig trees, but such trees generally produce inedible fruit. It may, however, be possible for a translator to use the term for such a forest tree but with the added explanation as to the fruit-bearing quality of the trees mentioned in the Bible.

to conceive, to become pregnant In many languages the process of becoming pregnant is expressed in different ways: ‘to begin to become large,’ ‘to receive sperm,’ ‘to let a child enter,’ or ‘to stop bleeding’ (a reference to the cessation of menstrual periods).

The phrases ἐν γαστρὶ (LUK 1:31) and ἐν τῇ κοιλίᾳ (LUK 2:21), meaning ‘in the womb,’ may be added to συλλαμβάνω without significant alteration of its meaning.

35.5 · (συλλαμβάνομαι) · Help, Care For · Help to join in helping to help by joining in an activity or effort In a number of instances it is not necessary to specify the joint effort or activity, since this is supplied by the context itself as, for example, in LUK 5:7 in which ‘coming to help’ indicates clearly the joint efforts. But in some languages it may be important to use a specific expression rather than a generic one. Accordingly, ‘to come and help them’ in LUK 5:7 may be rendered as ‘to come and work with them.’

to gather together, to come together, to go together, to meet, to assemble the movement of two or more objects to the same location¹ In a number of languages important distinctions are made in terms referring to gathering or assembling of animate beings. The distinctions are usually based upon the number of individuals, the distance which they have come, and whether or not the individuals in question constitute a membership group or whether they are merely a loose aggregation. In view of these types of distinctions, it is likely that quite different terms will be required for the various contexts listed for this set of related meanings.

to complete, to come to an end to come to the end of a period of time, with the implication of the completion of an implied purpose or plan¹ In a number of languages it may be difficult to speak of a period of time being ‘complete.’ In LUK 1:23 one may often translate as ‘when he had finished his period of service’ or even ‘when he had done his work.’ In the case of ACT 7:30, the expression ‘after forty years were completed’ may be rendered in some languages as ‘after forty years were passed’ or ‘when forty years had happened.’

¹ In a number of contexts it is difficult to determine whether the meanings in 67.69 and 67.70 are primarily temporal or aspectual. If the meaning in any one context seems to focus upon the completion of an activity, then the meaning should be classified as aspectual (Domain 68 Aspect), but if the emphasis would seem to be primarily upon the end point of an activity, then one may legitimately classify these meanings as being temporal.

music melodic and rhythmic sound, produced either by several instruments or by a single instrument In view of the combination of music and dancing, it will be necessary in some languages to choose a term for music which will fit this type of context, that is to say, music which would be normally employed for a dance.

¹ LUK 15:25 In LUK 15:25 there are differences of opinion as to the meaning of συμφωνία. Some scholars contend that the reference is to music produced by several instruments, while others insist that this is music produced by a single instrument, possibly a double flute or a kind of bagpipe.

¹ The semantic domains of σύν[a] (89.107) and μετά[a] (89.108) overlap considerably, for in a number of instances essentially the same referential relationship can be expressed either by σύν[a] or by μετά[a]. However, in contexts involving hostility and combat, opposing forces may be spoken of as fighting against one another with μετά[a]. In this type of context the preposition σύν[a] would not be appropriate, since it would suggest those fighting on the same side, not on opposite sides of the conflict.

to gather together, to come together, to go together, to meet, to assemble the movement of two or more objects to the same location² In a number of languages important distinctions are made in terms referring to gathering or assembling of animate beings. The distinctions are usually based upon the number of individuals, the distance which they have come, and whether or not the individuals in question constitute a membership group or whether they are merely a loose aggregation. In view of these types of distinctions, it is likely that quite different terms will be required for the various contexts listed for this set of related meanings.

¹ LUK 12:17 συναγω in LUK 12:17 is another instance of a complex semantic structure involving not only the gathering together of material but the proper provision for it in some location. In LUK 12:17 the focus seems to be upon the storage rather than the process of harvesting. ² There are no doubt a number of subtle distinctions in meaning in this series of expressions meaning ‘to gather together,’ but the precise distinctions in meaning cannot be determined from existing NT contexts.

συναγωγή (G4864)

noun, f. | -ῆς | ἄγω

11.44 · Groups and Classes of Persons and Members of Such Groups and Classes · Socio-Religious assembly, congregation an assembled group of worshipers or members of such a group In JAS 2:2 συναγωγή may indicate the place of gathering, rather than the assembled group (see συναγωγή[c], 7.20).

In translating JAS 2:2 it is possible to render the conditional clause as ‘if a person comes into your church’ or ‘... into your congregation.’

ACT 13:43 · JAS 2:2 · REV 2:9 · REV 3:9

11.45 · Groups and Classes of Persons and Members of Such Groups and Classes · Socio-Religious synagogue, congregation a congregation of Jews Since the borrowed term ‘synagogue’ in receptor languages so frequently refers only to a building rather than to a congregation, it may be necessary in ACT 9:2 to say ‘he asked for letters of introduction to leaders of the synagogues’ or ‘... leaders of the congregations of Jews.’

ACT 6:9 · ACT 9:2 · ACT 15:21

7.20 · Constructions · Buildings synagogue or Christian assembly place a building of assembly, associated with religious activity (normally a building in which Jewish worship took place and in which the Law was taught, but in JAS 2:2 a Christian assembly place) It is also possible to interpret συναγωγή in JAS 2:2 as a reference to an assembly of believers rather than to a building (see 11.44).

It is important to distinguish clearly between συναγωγή[c] and ναός[a] (7.15) or ιερός[b] (7.16). There were many synagogues, but only one Temple in Jerusalem, and it is not enough to speak of synagogues merely as ‘small temples.’ It is better either to borrow a term for synagogue or employ a descriptive equivalent such as ‘places where Jewish people worshiped God’ or ‘buildings for worshiping God.’

It is also important to distinguish in translating between a term for ‘synagogue’ and for ‘church,’ whether as a reference to the congregation or to the building.

This latter reading is supported by some manuscripts.

ACT 1:4

συναλλάσσω

συναλλάσσω

συναλλάσσω (G4900a)

verb | ἀλλάσσω

40.1 · Reconciliation, Forgiveness · Reconciliation to reconcile, to make things right with one another, reconciliation to reestablish proper friendly interpersonal relations after these have been disrupted or broken (the componential features of this series of meanings involve (1) disruption of friendly relations because of (2) presumed or real provocation (3) overt behavior designed to remove hostility, and (4) restoration of original friendly relations)¹ Because of the variety and complexity of the components involved in reconciliation, it is often necessary to use an entire phrase in order to communicate satisfactorily the meanings of the terms in this subdomain. In some languages, however, reconciliation is often spoken of in idiomatic terms, for example, ‘to cause to become friends again,’ ‘to cause to snap fingers again’ (a symbol of friendly interpersonal relations in many parts of Africa), ‘to cause to be one again,’ or ‘to take away the separation.’ A particularly crucial element in terms for reconciliation is the assigning of responsibility for original guilt in causing the estrangement. Some terms, for example, imply that the individual who initiates reconciliation is by doing so admitting his guilt in causing the estrangement. This, of course, provides a completely untenable meaning for reconciliation in speaking of God reconciling people to himself through Christ.

In a number of languages the contextual basis for an expression for reconciliation is often found in terms relating to the reconciliation of husbands and wives. Such expressions fit in well with many contexts in the Scriptures, especially in speaking of reconciliation of people to God, since God is frequently referred to as the husband and the believers as the wife.

This is the only instance of συναλλάσσω in the NT, and it has εἰς εἰρήνην added to emphasize peace as the goal, although the feature of making peace between previously hostile individuals is already implicit in the act of reconciliation.

ACT 7:26

¹ It may be that there are certain subtle distinctions of meaning in the series in 40.1, but there appears to be no contextual indication to justify setting up completely separate meanings.

verb | aor.pass. συνηγέρθη | ἐγείρω

to raise to life together with to cause to live again together with others There are serious semantic difficulties involved in a literal translation of συνεγείρω or συζωοποιέω, for a literal rendering could either be interpreted as ‘to be raised to life at the same time with’ or ‘to be raised to life in the same way as,’ but the reference in COL 3:1 and EPH 2:5 is to a spiritual existence more than to a literal resurrection of the body. This means that both συνεγείρω and συζωοποιέω must be understood as highly figurative. Hence, in COL 3:1 it may be necessary to translate εἰ οὖν συνηγέρθητε τῷ Χριστῷ as ‘since you have been raised to life, so to speak, with Christ’ or ‘since, as it were, you have been raised to life with Christ.’ In this way one may point to the fact of a figurative element involved.

συνέδριον (G4892)

noun, n. | -ον | ἐδραῖος

11.79 · Groups and Classes of Persons and Members of Such Groups and Classes · Socio-Political city council, council of judges a socio-political group acting as a judicial council There are certain problems involved in the rendering of συνέδριον[a] as ‘city council,’ since in so many parts of the world a group which would be designated as a ‘city council’ would be primarily legislative rather than judicial in function. It is for that reason that συνέδριον[a] may be better translated in a number of instances as ‘the council which will judge you’ or ‘before a group of men who will decide whether you have done right or wrong.’

MAT 10:17 · MRK 13:9

Sanhedrin, the council of the Jews the highest Jewish council, exercising jurisdiction in civil and religious matters, but having no power over life and death or over military actions or taxation¹ In a number of languages συνέδριον[b] can be rendered by a descriptive phrase, for example, ‘the most important council of the Jews’ or ‘the council that made decisions for the Jewish people.’

¹ Though γερουσία and πρεσβυτέριον[a] refer to the same council of the Jews as the term συνέδριον[b] (11.80), this does not mean that the three terms are completely identical in meaning. The focus upon maturity of age and judgment as well as presumed social standing are more significant factors in γερουσία and πρεσβυτέριον[a] than in συνέδριον[b].

to have sexual intercourse with a figurative extension of meaning of συνέρχομαι[a] ‘to come together,’ 15.123 In almost all languages there are euphemistic ways of speaking about sexual intercourse, and the use of γινώσκω[f] and συνέρχομαι[c] is illustrative of this in the Greek NT. It is possible to translate γινώσκω in LUK 1:34 as simply ‘for I am not married to a man,’ and likewise, συνέρχομαι in MAT 1:18 may be rendered as ‘before they were married.’ In some languages one may use such expressions as ‘before they were joined’ or ‘before they slept together’ or ‘before they discovered one another.’

σῶμα

σῶμα (G4983)

noun, n. | -τος | σύσσωμος · σωματικός · σωματικῶς

8.1 · Body, Body Parts, and Body Products · Body body the physical body of persons, animals, or plants,¹ either dead or alive In a number of languages a clear distinction must be made between the body of a living person and a dead body (or corpse). Other languages distinguish between the bodies of persons and the bodies of animals, and frequently the term for a body of a plant is distinct from those referring to persons or animals. Often a term for body consists of a phrase, for example, ‘flesh and bones,’ and in a number of languages a reference to the body is made primarily by referring to the person himself. For example, in MAT 26:12 (‘has poured this ointment on my body’) the appropriate equivalent may be ‘has poured this ointment on me.’ In certain instances ‘body’ may be rendered as something which is experienced. For example, in 1CO 6:20 ‘glorify God through your body’ may be rendered as ‘glorify God through what you do’ or ‘... do in your body.’

congregation, Christian group, church (a figurative extension of meaning of σῶμα[a] ‘body,’ 8.1) believers in Christ who are joined together as a group, with the implication of each having a distinctive function within the group Though in some languages it may seem relatively strange to speak of an organization of persons as a ‘body,’ it is important to try to preserve in one way or another this figurative meaning of σῶμα, since it plays such an important role in various phases of Paul’s teaching. It is frequently necessary, however, to change the metaphor into a simile, as has already been suggested in the translation of EPH 4:12.

heavenly body (an idiom, literally: heavenly body, occurring in the NT only in the plural³) the luminous objects in the sky: sun, moon, and other planets and stars See also 1.8.

The phrase σῶμα ἐπουράνιον is a highly generic expression which in the plural is sometimes translatable as ‘lights in the sky,’ but more often than not it may be necessary to identify the various heavenly bodies as ‘sun, moon, and stars.’ In certain contexts one may also wish to identify the planets, often spoken of as ‘wandering stars’ or ‘moving stars’ (reflecting the etymology of the English word planet, which is derived from a Greek word meaning ‘wanderer’). These are, of course, not to be confused with shooting stars and comets in the sky.

Collocation: ἐκδημέω ἐκ τοῦ σώματος

¹ The use of σῶμα[a] in connection with plants is quite rare in extrabiblical Greek and perhaps only occurs in 1CO 15:37 because of the analogy between plants and persons in treating the theme of the resurrection body. ² σῶμα[b] is very similar in meaning to σάρξ[f] (26.7) in that both denote human nature. There are, however, certain connotative differences in meaning in that σάρξ[f] seems to focus more upon the purely physical desires of human nature, with the possible implication of greater emphasis upon normal sexual impulses. ³ It is difficult to say whether the phrase σῶμα ἐπουράνιον should be treated as a fixed phrase with a shifted meaning for the head word σῶμα and thus a type of idiom, or whether it should be considered a semantically endocentric expression and thus not a so-called lexical unit. The treatment of σῶμα ἐπουράνιον as semantically endocentric can certainly be justified by the highly generic meaning of σῶμα as body, object, but one may also argue that the restriction in reference to the sun, moon, planets, and stars provides a basis for regarding it as semantically exocentric.
