χαλεπός (G5467)

adjc. | -ή, -όν

22.29 · Trouble, Hardship, Relief, Favorable Circumstances · Difficult, Hard troublesome, distressful, violent pertaining to that which causes trouble and hardship, with an implication of violence It may be very difficult in some languages to speak of ‘troublesome times,’ for ‘trouble’ seems to relate to human experience and not to circumstances. Therefore, this expression in 2Ti 3:1 can perhaps be best rendered in some languages as ‘in the last days, people will suffer very much.’

bit, bridle items used to control the actions of a horse, consisting of a bit (a short metal bar placed in the mouth of a horse) and bridle (ropes or leather straps attached to the bit and fitted over the horse’s head) In languages in which a bit or bridle as a piece of harness is not known, one can employ a descriptive phrase, ‘something to guide a horse with’ or ‘something to put in the mouth of a horse to guide it.’

In REV 14:20 the reference to a bit and bridle is merely an indication of measurement, that is to say, the height of the bit and bridle from the ground, and one may reinterpret this measurement as ‘about a meter and a half’ or ‘about five feet.’

2.54 · Natural Substances · Metals

bronze, brass, copper generally bronze (an alloy of copper and tin), but in some contexts apparently brass (an alloy of copper and zinc) and perhaps in a few instances copper. Most archaeological objects of the Middle East containing copper consist of bronze, and therefore the most accurate translation of χαλκός[a] is in most instances a term for bronze, which is harder than brass and much harder than pure copper. Many languages have technical terms for bronze, brass, and copper, but some simply designate bronze as ‘brown metal,’ brass as ‘bright metal,’ and copper as ‘red metal.’

copper coins, bronze money coins of bronze or copper, and hence of little value¹

MAT 10:9 · MRK 6:8 · MRK 12:41

6.95 · Artifacts · Musical Instruments

Collocation: χαλκὸς ἤχων

brass gong (an idiom, literally: echoing brass, or: resounding brass) a gong made of brass. In a number of languages the equivalent of gong is ‘noisy metal’ or ‘reverberating metal’ or ‘echoing metal,’ but frequently translators have simply used an expression meaning ‘loud bell.’

¹ Except for the occurrence of ἀργύριον in the plural (MAT 26:15), it would be possible to derive all of these references to copper (bronze), silver, and gold coins as direct and predictable metonymic correspondences of the respective terms for substances (see 2.54, 51, 49). Since, however, some languages employ clear distinctions between metals as substances and metals when manufactured into the form of coins, the present classification would seem to be more useful.

favor, good will a favorable attitude toward someone or something In the expressions ἔχοντες χάριν πρὸς ὅλον τὸν λαόν (ACT 2:47) and εὗρες γὰρ χάριν παρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ (LUK 1:30) it would appear on the basis of superficial examination that the subject of the participle or the verb is in some respects an active agent. Semantically, however, the subject is actually the recipient of the good will, and in these contexts it is either the people or God who takes pleasure in or is pleased by the grammatical subjects in question. These expressions are typical of situations in which the semantic relationships are almost completely the reverse of the syntactic relationships.

1.77 · Geographical Objects and Features · Bodies of Water brook, winter stream, rainy-season stream a stream or river which flows only during the rainy season (in Palestine this would be during the winter months) or when melting snow from the mountains provides running water for a relatively short period of time The reference in JHN 18:1 is probably to the narrow valley, not to the stream itself, as noted in 1.52.

ravine, wadi a ravine or narrow valley in which a stream flows during the rainy season, but which is normally dry during the dry season In desert areas of the world designations for such ravines or valleys are common enough; in fact, there may be several different terms to describe different types of wadis, but for tropical areas and for most temperate parts of the world, it may seem incredible that rivers would regularly dry up during part of the year. What is important, however, in the biblical context in which χείμαρρος[a] ‘a seasonal stream,’ 1.77).

67.165 · Time · Definite Units of Time: Year, Month, Week, Day, Hour

winter the coldest season of the year In a number of languages it may be important to translate χειμών[a] as simply ‘the time of the cold rains.’ Such rains may actually occur during the growing season or as a part of the rainy season. In semi-tropical areas, however, the cold rains do normally occur in what is regarded as the winter, while the warm rains occur in the summer. See also discussion at 67.163.

MAT 24:20 · MRK 13:18 · JHN 10:22 · 2TI 4:21

14.2 · Physical Events and States · Weather

bad weather, stormy weather stormy weather involving strong wind, overcast sky, and often cold temperature; thunder and lightning may also be present The principal difficulty involved in translating χειμών[b] is the fact that in so many languages there are quite distinct terms for various kinds of bad weather or storms. Furthermore, the location of such bad weather will also influence significantly the terms which may be used. For example, stormy weather over the open sea may require quite a different term from what would be used in speaking of a similar kind of storm over the land. In addition, storms which are accompanied by rain may also be referred to by different terms from those which involve wind without rain. Accordingly, one must carefully examine each biblical context in which χειμών[b] is employed and determine what would be the most satisfactory expression in the receptor language. For example, in MAT 16:3 the reference is to a windstorm accompanied by clouds and moving over land, while in ACT 27:20 the reference is to a storm of long duration which takes place over a body of water.

hand, finger a hand or any relevant portion of the hand, including, for example, the fingers In rendering MAT 8:3 it would be inappropriate in some languages to translate literally ‘he stretched out his hand,’ since this would imply some kind of miracle of extending the hand itself. A correct rendering may be ‘he extended his arm and touched him with his hand.’

In LUK 15:22 χείρ refers to the finger, not to the hand, and therefore it is necessary to translate in most languages ‘put a ring on his finger.’

¹ In this subdomain (Human Beings) a number of expressions referring to people are based upon metonymies involving terms for parts or aspects of persons. Such metonymic figures of speech are involved in σὰρξ καὶ αἷμα (9.14), γόνυ[b] (9.16), χεῖρ[b] (9.17), γλῶσσα[g] (9.18), ὄνομα[b] (9.19), and ψυχὴ[c] (9.20). ² It is possible that χεῖρ[c], βραχίον, and δάκτυλος[b] in the figurative sense of power of an individual differ somewhat in meaning one from the other, but it is impossible to determine this on the basis of existing contexts. ³ The phrases ἐπιβάλλω τὰς χεῖρας and ἐπιβάλλω τὴν χεῖρα ἐπί also occur with events, and as such focus attention on the beginning of an event, for example, οὐδεὶς ἐπιβαλὼν τὴν χεῖρα ἐπ’ ἄροτρον ‘no one puts his hand to the plow’ or ‘no one begins to plow’ LUK 9:62. A treatment of this meaning is in 68.6.

winged creature, cherubim in the NT the image of the winged creature that stood over the covenant box (but in certain OT contexts, supernatural winged creatures) Since it is difficult to employ a satisfactory descriptive equivalent of χερούβ, most translators have simply employed a borrowed term and have described the appearance of the χερούβ in a glossary or marginal note. In English, however, it is impossible to use ‘cherub,’ since cherubs are known simply as ‘baby angels’ (typical of Valentine cards). In some English translations the plural form of χερούβ, namely, ‘cherubim,’ has been employed, but for some persons cherubim is a singular with an analogically formed plural cherubims. In general, for χερούβ one can best employ a phrase, either ‘the image of a winged creature’ or ‘a winged creature.’

2.12 · Natural Substances · Water

snow In the NT χιών occurs only as a symbol of complete whiteness, and hence in those cases in which a receptor language may not have any term for snow, it is possible to use a nonfigurative expression such as ‘very, very white.’ In a number of languages, however, there may not be a specific term for snow but a type of descriptive phrase reflecting people’s knowledge about snow, even though the substance may not occur in their immediate vicinity. For example, in some instances snow is spoken of as ‘volcano frost.’ In certain parts of the world, however, the translator’s problem is not in finding a term for snow but in distinguishing between a number of different terms which designate distinct types of snow and snow formations. Under such circumstances one can simply use for ‘snow’ an expression which suggests the whitest variety or that form of snow which is most commonly referred to.

plant (semantic derivative of χλωρός[a] ‘green,’ 79.34) In a number of languages it would seem redundant to speak of ‘green plants,’ since all plants are regarded as being green. It may therefore be more satisfactory to employ a rendering such as ‘nor any plant,’ referring in this instance to larger annual plants or bushes, in contrast with both grass and trees.

¹ It is difficult to determine whether χλωρός should be regarded as having two different meanings or whether the meaning should be regarded as covering a range of color from light green through greenish yellow and greenish gray, but for the practical purposes of highlighting certain differences in color, two meanings of χλωρός are listed here (79.34 and 79.35). ² REV 9:4 The Greek term χλωρόν (as a substantive) also occurs in non-New Testament contexts with a generic meaning of any kind of plant, thus being roughly equivalent to the meaning of φυτεία (3.1), but in REV 9:4 χλωρόν contrasts with χόρτον ‘grass’ and δένδρον ‘tree’ and thus evidently refers to larger annuals and smaller perennial plants.

However, in the story of the Prodigal

Son (LUK 15:15) the reference to the task of feeding swine certainly indicates the desperate condition of the younger brother. Some translators have found it necessary to indicate such a fact by a marginal note, since the language into which the translation is being made may reflect a very different cultural attitude from that which occurs in the Scriptures. For example, in certain areas of New Guinea, one who is responsible for taking care of pigs is an individual with relatively high social status.

In MAT 5:6 (ὅτι αὐτοὶ χορτασθήσονται 'because they will be satisfied') the occurrence of χορτάζω should be interpreted as figurative, for it does not have specific reference to being satisfied with food (see 25.82).

χόρτασμα (G5527)

5.1 · Foods and Condiments · Food

food any kind of food or nourishment¹ Almost all languages have at least a few general terms for food, though these may be derived from verbal expressions meaning essentially ‘that which is eaten.’ In some instances a distinction may be made between ‘that which is chewed’ and ‘that which is drunk,’ and it may therefore be important in certain contexts to speak of food in general by a phrase meaning ‘that which is either chewed or drunk.’ If one fails to include both types of food, the reader might interpret a passage such as MAT 6:11 as requesting only solid foods.

In the place of a general term or phrase such as ‘that which is eaten’ or ‘that which is consumed,’ some languages generalize the meaning of a particular term. For example, in certain parts of the Orient the term meaning specifically ‘rice’ also refers to ‘food’ in general. In fact, some persons will declare, ‘I have not eaten!’ if they have not had rice as part of a meal. A similar type of meaning has developed in English with respect to ‘bread.’ For example, in rendering LUK 4:4 (οὐκ ἐπ’ ἄρτῳ μόνῳ ζήσεται ὁ ἄνθρωπος ‘man shall not live by bread alone’) it would be wrong to employ a strictly literal rendering, since this might mean simply that people should not live on a diet consisting solely of bread. The meaning of LUK 4:4 is, of course, ‘to live means more than merely eating.’

¹ There are no doubt certain subtle differences of meaning in the various terms listed here as meaning ‘food,’ but it is impossible to determine such distinctions in meaning from NT contexts. Perhaps τροφή and διατροφή are somewhat more generic in meaning and may suggest a greater emphasis upon nourishment. At the same time, βρώσις[c] and βρώμα[a] may imply solid substantive food, but it is difficult, if not impossible, to argue for such subtle connotative distinctions in meanings which are essentially generic. ² ACT 7:11 Although in Hellenistic Greek χόρτασμα normally refers to the food of animals and is regularly rendered as ‘fodder,’ in ACT 7:11 the reference is to food for people.

χόρτος (G5528)

3.15 · Plants · Plants That Are Not Trees

small plants, grass small green plants (and in NT contexts referring primarily to green grass in a field or meadow) In referring to small green plants, a number of languages employ two quite different terms, one indicating specifically grass (with leaves having parallel veins) and the other designating all other types of annual plants (those having branching veins in the leaves). In MAT 13:26 it is important to employ a term which would include grass and other plants with parallel veins, since the weeds in this passage imitate the appearance of wheat, which does have parallel veins in the leaves.

MAT 6:30 · MAT 13:26 · MAT 14:19 · MRK 6:39 · LUK 12:28 · JHN 6:10 · 1CO 3:12 · JAS 1:10 · JAS 1:11 · 1PE 1:24 · 1PE 1:24 · 1PE 1:24 · REV 8:7 · REV 9:4

3.48 · Plants · Non-Fruit Parts of Plants

sprout, blade the young growth of a plant arising from a germinating seed¹ In a number of languages a clear distinction is made between different kinds of ‘sprouts.’ Certain sprouts have only a single blade (for example, grass), while others are double (as in the case of beans). In MRK 4:28 the reference is to a grass-like plant with a single blade

MRK 4:28

¹ It would be possible to combine χόρτος[b] (3.48) with χόρτος[a] small plant, grass (3.15), since the meaning of χόρτος[a] would seem to include the meaning of sprout. On the other hand, the semantic focus of MRK 4:28 appears to be upon the tender sprout, rather than upon the full-size plant, and since this distinction is lexically important in a number of languages, the term χόρτος has been divided into χόρτος[a] and χόρτος[b] .

to anoint, to assign, to appoint, assignment, appointment (figurative extension of meaning of χρῖσμα ‘to anoint,’ not occurring in the NT) to assign a person to a task, with the implication of supernatural sanctions, blessing, and endowment It is rare that one can employ a literal rendering of χρίω or χρῖσμα in such contexts as LUK 4:18 and 1JN 2:20, since ‘to pour oil upon someone’ as a means of conveying a supernatural blessing and endowment for a task is culturally very rare. A strictly literal rendering of χρίω or χρῖσμα as ‘to pour oil upon’ is likely to be interpreted either as an insult or as an event preparatory to setting a person on fire and thus to destroy or to torture. Accordingly, in place of a literal rendering of χρίω or χρίσμα, it is often necessary to employ some such expression as ‘to be appointed by God’ or ‘to be given a special task by God.’

χρίω (G5548)

verb | ἀντίχριστος · ἐγγρίω · ἐπιχρίω · χρίσμα · Χριστιανός · Χριστός · ψευδόχριστος

37.107 · Control, Rule · Assign to a Role or Function to anoint, to assign, to appoint, assignment, appointment (figurative extension of meaning of χρίω ‘to anoint,’ not occurring in the NT) to assign a person to a task, with the implication of supernatural sanctions, blessing, and endowment It is rare that one can employ a literal rendering of χρίω or χρίσμα in such contexts as LUK 4:18 and 1JN 2:20, since ‘to pour oil upon someone’ as a means of conveying a supernatural blessing and endowment for a task is culturally very rare. A strictly literal rendering of χρίω or χρίσμα as ‘to pour oil upon’ is likely to be interpreted either as an insult or as an event preparatory to setting a person on fire and thus to destroy or to torture. Accordingly, in place of a literal rendering of χρίω or χρίσμα, it is often necessary to employ some such expression as ‘to be appointed by God’ or ‘to be given a special task by God.’

67.1 · Time · A Point of Time without Reference to Other Points of Time: Time, Occasion, Ever, Often time, occasion points of time consisting of occasions for particular events In a number of languages there is no general term for 'time' or 'occasion.' In some contexts it is simply not necessary to have such a term. For example, in rendering MAT 13:30 one may translate 'when the harvest comes, I will say to the reapers' or 'when people begin to harvest, I will say to the reapers.' In other contexts, a term which normally refers to some unit is employed in a generic sense, as in the case of Greek ὥρα which means literally 'hour' but is frequently used as a generic expression for a point of time, as in MAT 8:13. In ACT 7:17 χρόνος may often be rendered by a generic expression such as 'day,' for example, 'when it was almost the day for God to keep his promise.' In the case of MAT 26:45, the nearness of the time may be indicated as 'very soon the Son of Man will be handed over.'

Though it seems quite ordinary in English for one to speak of 'time coming' or '... drawing near,' this type of figurative usage is impossible in many languages. The equivalent may be simply 'will soon be' or 'is about to happen.' The expression οὐπω ἤκει ἡ ὥρα μου (literally 'my time has not yet come') in JHN 2:4 denotes that it is not yet the occasion for a particular event (see καιρός in JHN 7:8 and compare JHN 7:10) but that it will soon be. In these contexts the expression may be rendered as 'there is still time' or 'I will soon do it.' In JHN 7:30 and JHN 8:20 (οὐπω ἐληλύθει ἡ ὥρα αὐτοῦ 'his time has not yet come') the reference is to the occasion of his eventual arrest, implying that it will indeed happen.

¹ It would be possible to interpret χρυσίον in REV 17:4 as being merely a natural substance and thus classified with χρυσίον[a] (2.49), but χρυσίον[b] seems to have acquired certain specializations of meaning and even in the singular to be a collective for objects made of gold. It is for that reason that χρυσίον in REV 17:4 is classified in this domain.

¹ Except for the occurrence of ἀργύριον in the plural (MAT 26:15), it would be possible to derive all of these references to copper (bronze), silver, and gold coins as direct and predictable metonymic correspondences of the respective terms for substances (see 2.54, 2.51, 2.49). Since, however, some languages employ clear distinctions between metals as substances and metals when manufactured into the form of coins, the present classification would seem to be more useful.

1.60 · Geographical Objects and Features · Land in Contrast With the Sea

land dry land, in contrast with the sea In a number of languages a clear distinction is made between terms which designate land in contrast with water and those which designate cultivated land. Even in English the normal term for land close to water is ‘shore’ or ‘coast,’ and therefore one may translate MAT 14:24 as ‘the boat was already far away from the shore.’ Similarly, in ACT 27:27 one may translate ‘we were getting close to shore.’

region, inhabitants of a region the inhabitants of a region² In a number of languages it is quite impossible to speak of ‘a region going out’ (MRK 1:5), since the term for ‘region’ cannot substitute for ‘the people of the region.’ Therefore, all such references must be made personal.

MRK 1:5

¹ The overlapping features of meaning in γῆ[d], χώρα[b], κλίμα, ὄριον, and μέρος[c] may be readily illustrated by the comparable overlapping of English terms such as ‘region,’ ‘territory,’ and ‘land.’ For example, in the case of MAT 15:21 it would be possible to speak of the ‘region of Tyre and Sidon,’ the ‘territory of Tyre and Sidon,’ the ‘land of Tyre and Sidon,’ and even the ‘district of Tyre and Sidon.’ The English terms ‘region,’ ‘territory,’ ‘land,’ and ‘district’ do differ in certain nuances of meaning reflecting primarily supplementary components which are largely connotative. ² It is possible that in the case of such meanings as τόπος[f] (11.59), πόλις[c] (11.61), κώμη[b] (11.62), and χώρα[e] (11.64) one should count on certain more or less automatic semantic rules by which the meaning of ‘inhabitants’ could be derived by metonymy from expressions of place. Since, however, such metonymic developments are far from universal, the distinct meanings are listed here as a practical guide to translators. The same type of problem occurs with Ἱεροσόλυμα ‘Jerusalem,’ Ἰουδαία ‘Judea,’ and περίχωρος ‘region’ in MAT 3:5.

χωρέω (G5562)

verb | ἀναχωρέω · ἀποχωρέω · ἐκχωρέω · εὐρύχωρος · Περίχωρος · στενοχωρέομαι · στενοχωρία · ὑποχωρέω · χώρα · χωρίον

15.13 · Linear Movement · Move, Come/Go to move on, to advance to move on from one place to another In translating MAT 15:17 it may be necessary to add an element which suggests swallowing, since something which enters a person’s mouth does not automatically go into the stomach. Accordingly, it may be necessary to translate ‘anything that goes into a person’s mouth and is swallowed goes on then into his stomach.’ It would also be possible to say ‘anything that goes into one’s throat goes on then into a person’s stomach.’

In JHN 8:37 χωρέω[a] appears to be used figuratively in the statement ὁ λόγος ὁ ἐμὸς οὐ χωρεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν ‘my word makes no progress in you,’ but it is also possible to interpret χωρέω in this context as referring to an adequate place, for example, ‘my word finds no room in you’ (see 80.4).

34.78 · Association · Marriage, Divorce to divorce, to separate to dissolve the marriage bond Expressions for divorce are often based on terms meaning literally ‘to send away,’ ‘to separate from,’ or ‘to leave one another.’ However, in a number of languages idiomatic expressions are employed, for example ‘to send him off with his clothes,’ ‘to untie the knot between them,’ or ‘to throw away her hearthstones.’

Some persons have attempted to make an important distinction between ἀφίημι in 1CO 7:11 and χωρίζω in 1CO 7:15 on the assumption that ἀφίημι implies legal divorce, while χωρίζω only relates to separation. Such a distinction, however, seems to be quite artificial.

χωρίς (G5565)

prep. (with gen.), advb. | χωρίζω

89.120 · Relations · Dissociation

without, not with, no relationship to, apart from, independent of a marker of negatively linked elements¹ It would be wrong to restructure JHN 1:3 to read 'he made everything in all creation,' for in the Scriptures God is spoken of as the Creator, but the creation was done 'through the Word.' If one must restructure JHN 1:3, it may be possible to say 'he was involved in everything that was created' or 'he took part in creating everything.'

In 1CO 11:11 χωρίς does not specify the particular relationship but only indicates the lack of relationship or involvement. This, of course, is negated by οὔτε, so that one may translate this portion of 1CO 11:11 as 'nor is woman without some relationship to man, nor is man without relationship to woman.' In view of the overall context, one may then render the passage simply as 'woman is not independent of man, nor is man independent of woman.' In some languages, however, it may be necessary of 'wife' and 'husband,' since terms for 'man' or 'woman' may be wrongly interpreted in a strictly erotic sense.

Because of the double negation of 1CO 11:11, in some languages it may be necessary to employ a positive equivalent, for example, 'for woman is dependent on man and man is dependent on woman' or 'a wife is dependent on her husband and a husband is dependent on his wife.'

The expression 'apart from any works' in ROM 4:6 may be rendered in some languages as 'and what a person does, does not count' or 'and this is not because of what one does.'

¹ It appears impossible to find a significant distinction between ἄνευ and ἄτερ. It may be that χωρίς[a] differs from ἄνευ and ἄτερ in focusing upon a greater degree of separation or lack of involvement.

χωρος

χωρος (G5566)

noun, m. | -ου

82.5 · Spacial Orientations · North, South, East, West

northwest the direction between north and west The difference in expression is due to designating the directions of the wind either as the direction from which the wind comes or the direction toward which the wind blows. See commentaries.

In rendering directions which are not cardinal points, one may often use a variety of expressions, for example, 'between north and west' or 'from the north a little west' or 'to the north of west.' A high percentage of languages designate directions by reference to the rising and setting of the sun. Accordingly, ACT 27:12 may be rendered as 'a harbor that is open to the sea to the left of the setting sun and to the right of the setting sun.'
