Father (title for God; a Greek transliteration of an Aramaic word meaning ‘father’) one who combines aspects of supernatural authority and care for his people Though there is a widespread tendency to preserve the Aramaic transliteration in the form of either abba or aba, there are frequent dangers in doing so, since the transliterated form may actually correspond to another word in a receptor language and thus provide an obstacle to proper understanding. In general, there is no point in a translation of ἄββᾶ, since the resulting expression would simply be Father Father. Accordingly, in many languages the combination of Abba, Father is simply reduced to Father. In a number of languages, however, a vocative form (that is to say, a form used in direct address) is different from a form used in speaking about God as Father. It is, of course, essential to employ the appropriate grammatical form.

In a number of languages it is necessary to distinguish clearly between ‘Father’ when referring to the heavenly Father and ‘father’ as a reference to a human father. The use of capitalization is quite satisfactory for the individual who is reading a text but not for one who is hearing it read, and since more people hear a text read than read it for themselves, it is essential that the reference of ‘Father’ be clear. In order to identify the use of ‘Father’ as a title for God, it is possible in many languages to use ‘Father in heaven’ or ‘Father above’ or ‘Father God.’

In some languages it may even be necessary to identify the ‘Father’ as the creator and therefore employ a phrase such as ‘our Father who created us.’

A particularly complicating factor involved in the use of ‘Father’ as a title for God is its occurrence without a pronominal reference as to whose father is involved. For example, in a number of languages one cannot speak of ‘father’ without indicating whose father, because a person does not become a father except by some relationship to another individual. Therefore, one must always speak of ‘my father’ or ‘his father’ and never simply ‘the father.’ In passages in which Jesus is speaking of ‘the Father’ in relationship to himself, it is necessary usually to employ a phrase such as ‘my Father.’ When, however, ‘Father’ is used as a title for ‘God’ in his relationship to people generally, then one may speak of ‘our Father’ (normally with an inclusive first person plural pronoun if the language in question makes a distinction between inclusive and exclusive first person plural pronoun referents).

Collocation: ὁ κόλπος Ἀβραάμ

Abraham's bosom, heaven (an idiom, literally: Abraham's bosom) the heavenly abode, with the implication of close interpersonal relations A literal rendering of κόλπος Ἀβραάμ as 'the bosom of Abraham' or 'the lap of Abraham' is often misleading. In some languages it may even suggest homosexuality, and in other cases it implies that Lazarus was either a baby or was changed into a baby in heaven. Since κόλπος Ἀβραάμ is generally interpreted as a reference to the eschatological heavenly feast,¹ one may be justified in rendering LUK 16:22 as in TEV "the poor man died and was carried by the angels to sit beside Abraham at the feast in heaven.” In some languages κόλπος Ἀβραάμ in this context is translated as ‘he was carried by the angels to Abraham’s side’ or ‘... to be with Abraham.’

1 According to ancient Jewish tradition, the end of the age would be characterized by a heavenly feast to be enjoyed by the righteous. This would be presided over by Abraham, and therefore to go to Abraham’s bosom would be equivalent to being an honored guest at this celestial banquet.

ἀγαπάω (G0025)

25.43 · Attitudes and Emotions · Love, Affection, Compassion

to love, to regard with affection, loving concern, love to have love for someone or something, based on sincere appreciation and high regard Though some persons have tried to assign certain significant differences of meaning between ἀγαπάω[a], ἀγάπη[a] and φιλέω[a], φιλία (25.33), it does not seem possible to insist upon a contrast of meaning in any and all contexts. For example, the usage in JHN 21:15 JHN 21:16 JHN 21:17 JHN 21:17 JHN 21:17 seems to reflect simply a rhetorical alternation designed to avoid undue repetition. There is, however, one significant clue to possible meaningful differences in at least some contexts, namely, the fact that people are never commanded to love one another with φιλέω or φιλία, but only with ἀγαπάω and ἀγάπη. Though the meanings of these terms overlap considerably in many contexts, there are probably some significant differences in certain contexts; that is to say, φιλέω and φιλία are likely to focus upon love or affection based upon interpersonal association, while ἀγαπάω and ἀγάπη focus upon love and affection based on deep appreciation and high regard. On the basis of this type of distinction, one can understand some of the reasons for the use of ἀγαπάω and ἀγάπη in commands to Christians to love one another. It would, however, be quite wrong to assume that φιλέω and φιλία refer only to human love, while ἀγαπάω and ἀγάπη refer to divine love. Both sets of terms are used for the total range of loving relations between people, between people and God, and between God and Jesus Christ.

to love, to regard with affection, loving concern, love to have love for someone or something, based on sincere appreciation and high regard Though some persons have tried to assign certain significant differences of meaning between ἀγαπάω[a], ἀγάπη[a] and φιλέω[a], φιλία (25.33), it does not seem possible to insist upon a contrast of meaning in any and all contexts. For example, the usage in JHN 21:15 JHN 21:16 JHN 21:17 JHN 21:17 JHN 21:17 seems to reflect simply a rhetorical alternation designed to avoid undue repetition. There is, however, one significant clue to possible meaningful differences in at least some contexts, namely, the fact that people are never commanded to love one another with φιλέω or φιλία, but only with ἀγαπάω and ἀγάπη. Though the meanings of these terms overlap considerably in many contexts, there are probably some significant differences in certain contexts; that is to say, φιλέω and φιλία are likely to focus upon love or affection based upon interpersonal association, while ἀγαπάω and ἀγάπη focus upon love and affection based on deep appreciation and high regard.

25.45 · Attitudes and Emotions · Love, Affection, Compassion

object of one's affection, one who is loved, beloved, dear (derivative of ἀγαπάω[a] 'to love,' 25.43) pertaining to one who or that which is loved It is also possible to understand ἀγαπητός in MAT 12:18 as 'the only beloved one' (see 58.53), and the meaning may, in fact, be simply 'only' or 'unique.' This meaning has evidently arisen because of the association of ἀγαπητός with μονογενής 'unique, only' (58.52).

In the context of MAT 3:17 the focus seems clearly to be upon the distinctive and unique elements of meaning, but it would be entirely wrong to rule out the supplementary component of being loved and cherished (see ἀγαπητός[a], 25.45).

12.28 · Supernatural Beings and Powers · Supernatural Beings

angel a supernatural being that attends upon or serves as a messenger of a superior supernatural entity In many languages a term for ‘angels’ is borrowed from another dominant language, but in other instances a somewhat descriptive phrase may be employed. The most common expressions for the ‘angels of God’ are ‘messengers’ and ‘messengers from heaven.’ Sometimes these angels are called ‘spirit messengers’ and even ‘flying messengers.’ In some instances they have been called ‘the holy servants of God,’ but an expression such as ‘servants of God’ or even ‘messengers of God’ tends to overlap in meaning with expressions used to characterize the role and function of the prophets who were sent as messengers from God. In some languages a term for ‘angels’ is contrasted with that for ‘prophets’ by calling angels ‘messengers from heaven’ and prophets ‘messengers from God.’ The ‘angels of the Devil’ are often called ‘the Devil’s servants.’

One cannot avoid problems involved in the rendering of ‘angel’ merely by borrowing a term. In some instances such a borrowing may already exist in the language and with a different meaning. For example, in one instance ‘angel’ had already been borrowed but with a meaning of babies who died at childbirth or shortly thereafter.

devout, godly, dedicated pertaining to being dedicated or consecrated to the service of God In some languages it is essential to distinguish between ἅγιος and ὁσιος when these refer to God (see 88.24) and when they refer to persons or objects which have been consecrated to the service of God. It is both theoretically and practically advantageous to make a significant distinction in meaning on the basis of these contextual differences which occur in the Greek NT. It is not difficult to translate ἅγιος and ὁσιος by expressions meaning 'dedicated to God,' 'devout,' 'pious,' etc., but it may be extremely difficult to translate ἅγιος and ὁσιος when applied to God. In some languages one can only use an expression such as 'he who is truly God' or 'he who is in every respect God.'

Collocation: οἱ ἅγιοι

God's people persons who belong to God, and as such constitute a religious entity In rendering οἱ ἅγιοι it is important to avoid an expression which means 'sanctified,' for the focus is not upon a particular state of holiness, but upon a special relationship with God. Those who are spoken of as οἱ ἅγιοι may also be admonished to become sanctified.

In a number of respects, οἱ ἅγιοι is similar in meaning to λαός[b] 'people of God' (11.12) and to ἀδελφός[b] 'fellow believer' (11.23).

the holy place, (most) holy place the interior (either the outer or the inner of the two rooms) of the sanctuary of the Jerusalem Temple or of the earlier tabernacle or of a corresponding 'spiritual holy place,' perhaps regarded as being in heaven The inner room was more specifically identified by the phrase ἅγια ἁγίων, literally 'holy of holies' HEB 9:3, a Hebrew idiom indicating superlative degree. The inner sanctuary could also be referred to as 'within the curtain' (τὸ ἐσώτερον τοῦ καταπετάσματος HEB 6:19). See ἅγιος[a] (88.24) and 7.18.

The outer room of the sanctuary may be referred to in some languages as simply 'the first room of the Holy Temple' or 'the first holy room of the Temple.' The holy of holies may be referred to as 'the most holy place' or 'the second holy room of the Temple' or 'the interior holy room of the Temple.' What is important here is the degree of holiness, not so much the actual location within the Temple. It is for this reason that for the 'holy of holies' many translators use 'the most sacred place' or 'the very, very sacred room.' In this type of context the term 'sacred' may be rendered as 'dedicated especially to God' or 'consecrated to God.'

15.165 · Linear Movement · Lead, Bring, Take to lead, to bring to direct or guide the movement of an object, without special regard to point of departure or goal The Spirit of God is also regarded as an agent in leading or directing the movement of a person, for example, ἦγετο ἐν τῷ πνεύματι ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ he was led by the Spirit into the desert (LUK 4:1).

ἄγω[a] also occurs in contexts in which the leading involves force: ὅταν ἄγωσιν ὑμᾶς παραδιδόντες whenever you are taken into custody and turned over to the courts (MRK 13:11); Ἦγοντο δὲ καὶ ἕτεροι κακοῦργοι δύο σὺν αὐτῷ ἀναιρεθῆναι they led two others off also, both of them criminals, to be put to death with him (LUK 23:32).

36.1 · Guide, Discipline, Follow · Guide, Lead to guide, to direct, to lead to so influence others as to cause them to follow a recommended course of action In some languages it is difficult to distinguish readily between expressions for ‘leading’ and those which refer to ‘ruling’ or ‘governing,’ but it is important to try to distinguish clearly between these two different sets of interpersonal relations. In some languages, the concept of ‘leading’ can be expressed by ‘showing how to’ or ‘demonstrating how one ought to.’ In other languages it is possible to speak of ‘leading’ as simply ‘going ahead of,’ but too often such an expression may designate only ‘a scout’ who goes ahead to see whether things are safe, or it may refer only to a person who insists on his prerogative as the most distinguished person in a group.

1 ἄγω[b], in speaking of the relationship of persons to one another, normally means ‘to bring’ or ‘to lead,’ with the implication that the individual who is brought is able to walk or move on his own power, but in some contexts ἄγω[b] indicates that the person is actually carried, and thus ἄγω[b] parallels the use of φέρω[a] (15.187) or φορτίζω (15.207) in the sense of ‘to carry’ or ‘to bring’ an object.

sister a female having the same father and mother as the reference person For a discussion of ἀδελφή[a] in the possible meaning of cousin, see the discussion under ἀδελφός[a] (10.49).

A number of languages make a distinction in relative age of sisters, paralleling the usage of distinct terms for ‘brother’ (see 10.49). The order of names in the NT normally suggests relative age, and therefore in speaking of Martha and Mary in such languages, one may designate Mary as the younger sister, since the order is normally first Martha and then Mary, though in JHN 11:1 the order is reversed.

fellow believer, sister in Christ, sister in the faith a close female associate of a group with well-defined membership (in the NT referring specifically to fellow believers in Christ) Though in a number of languages it is possible to use a term meaning ‘sister’ in the sense of a fellow believer, in some languages this cannot be done. As in the case of ἀδελφός[b] (see 11.23), it may be possible to use a term such as ‘relative,’ but more often than not, it may be necessary to use a phrase such as ‘one who also believes’ or ‘one who believes in Christ even as we do.’

10.49 · Kinship Terms · Kinship Relations of the Same Generation

brother a male having the same father (and, usually, mother) as the reference person In a number of languages it is necessary to indicate the difference between older and younger brothers, and this can usually be done on the basis of Semitic usage, since the older brother was normally named first. Therefore, in MAT 4:18 one may translate ‘Simon and his younger brother Andrew.’

The interpretation of ἀδελφός[a] in such passages as MAT 12:46 MRK 3:31 JHN 2:12 as meaning cousins (on the basis of a corresponding Hebrew term, which is used in certain cases to designate masculine relatives of various degrees) is not attested in Greek nor affirmed in the Greek-English lexicon edited by Arndt, Gingrich, and Danker. Such an interpretation depends primarily on ecclesiastical tradition.

Though the plural of ἀδελφός[a] (namely, ἀδελφοί) can mean both brothers and sisters, there is no reason to believe that in MAT 12:46 MRK 3:31 JHN 2:12 JHN 7:3 JHN 7:5 ACT 1:14 the reference is to both brothers and sisters.

In LUK 8:21 (μήτηρ μου καὶ ἀδελφοί μου οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ τὸν λόγον τοῦ θεοῦ ἀκούοντες καὶ ποιῶντες my mother and my brothers are those who hear the word of God and act accordingly) ἀδελφοί is used figuratively as a qualification of Jesus followers. In some languages, however, it is necessary to make more evident the qualifying relationship, for example, those who hear the word and act accordingly are my mother and my brothers or ... are just like a mother and brothers to me.

fellow believer, (Christian) brother a close associate of a group of persons having a well-defined membership (in the NT ἀδελφός[b] refers specifically to fellow believers in Christ) The masculine form ἀδελφός[b] may include both men and women, but see also 11.24.

Though in a number of languages it is possible to use a corresponding term meaning ‘brother’ or ‘brothers’ in the sense of fellow believers, in some languages this cannot be done, and one must employ other types of expressions. In some instances it is possible to generalize a term meaning ‘relative’ and therefore to address or to speak of fellow Christians as ‘relatives’ rather than specifically ‘brothers and sisters.’ In most instances, however, one may only employ a phrase such as ‘those who also believe’ or ‘those who believe in Christ even as we do.’

It may be that of the three terms γείτων, περίοικος, and πλησίον[b], the last is somewhat broader in meaning. At least πλησίον is used in LUK 10:27 in a somewhat extended sense of ‘fellow man,’ while ἀδελφός[e] probably suggests a more intimate or close relationship.

the world of the dead, Hades a place or abode of the dead, including both the righteous and the unrighteous (in most contexts ἄδης[a] is equivalent to the Hebrew term Sheol) There are several problems involved in rendering ἄδης[a] as world of the dead, since in some languages this may be interpreted as suggesting that there are two different earths, one for the living and another for the dead. In such cases, ἄδης[a] may be more satisfactorily rendered as ‘where the dead are’ or ‘where the dead remain.’

In LUK 16:23 ἄδης[a] obviously involves torment and punishment. These aspects are important supplementary features of the word ἄδης[a] but are not integral elements of the meaning. In LUK 16:23, however, it may be appropriate to use a term which is equivalent to Greek γέεννα meaning hell (see 1.21). It is indeed possible that in addressing a GrecoRoman audience Luke would have used ἄδης in a context implying punishment and torment, since this was a typical Greco-Roman view of the next world. But since Luke also uses γέεννα, as in LUK 12:5, it is possible that the choice of ἄδης in LUK 16:23 reflects Luke’s intent to emphasize the fact that ἄδης[a] includes both the unrighteous and the righteous.

death, power of death (a figurative extension of meaning of ἄδης[a] Hades, 1.19, as a personification of the power of Hades as the place of the dead) In 1CO 15:55 ἄδης is a variant reading in the apparatus of θάνατε ‘death’ (23.99).

In some languages it is extremely difficult to personify death except as a reference to some demon which may cause death, but this, of course, is not the reference in this passage. The closest equivalent in some languages is ‘how can death be victorious?’ or ‘death cannot be victorious.’ In some instances it may be necessary to represent the personification as ‘you who cause death,’ and thus this expression in 1CO 15:55 may be translated as ‘you who cause death will not always be victorious’ or ‘... will not in the end be victorious.’

eagle, vulture generic word for a large bird of prey; genus Aquila, but may include others, esp. vulture In REV 12:14 the emphasis is upon strength and speed, and therefore a term meaning ‘eagle’ is probably more satisfactory, but in MAT 24:28 (and the parallel passages in LUK 17:37) the reference is to the eating of dead flesh, and therefore a word meaning ‘vultures’ is more appropriate.

The basic distinction between eagles and vultures is that the former either capture their prey or feed upon dead carcasses, while vultures only feed upon dead carcasses. Only in the Western Hemisphere are there two distinct families of birds: (1) birds of prey, which also feed upon dead bodies (eagles) and (2) vultures, which never take live prey, but only feed upon carcasses.

noun, m. | -έρος

air the space immediately above the earth's surface, and not including the dome arching over the earth The expression εἰς ἄερα λαλοῦντες, literally ‘talking into the air,’ may be regarded as a type of idiom meaning ‘talking to no purpose’ or ‘talking without anyone understanding.’ Accordingly, ἔσεσθε γὰρ εἰς ἄερα λαλοῦντες may be rendered as ‘you will be talking, but no one will understand’ or ‘you will be talking, but your words will not enter anyone.’ In ACT 22:23, κονιορτὸν βαλλόντων εἰς τὸν ἄερα ‘throwing dust into the air,’ it may be more appropriate in a number of languages to say ‘throwing dust above themselves’ or simply ‘throwing dust up.’ A literal rendering of ‘throwing dust into the air’ might suggest in some languages that the air was some kind of a container in which the dust remained.

The Greek term ἀήρ in REV 9:2 (ἐσκοτώθη ὁ ἥλιος καὶ ὁ ἀήρ ἐκ τοῦ καπνοῦ τοῦ φρέατος ‘the sun and the air were darkened by the smoke from the pit’) may very well be translated as ‘air,’ but since it is a reference primarily to space rather than to substance, it is more natural in a number of languages to say ‘the sky was darkened by the smoke from the pit.’

2.2 · Natural Substances · Air

air air as an elemental substance οὕτως πυκτεύω ὥς οὐκ ἄερα δέρων ‘I do not box like someone hitting the air’ 1CO 9:26. In some languages it may be quite impossible to translate literally ‘hitting the air,’ for since the air is not regarded as a kind of material substance, it is impossible to hit it. The closest equivalent may be ‘hitting nothing’ or possibly ‘as though hitting something.’

air, sky the space above the earth inhabited by and under the control of certain supernatural powers¹ In the context of EPH 2:2 ἐξουσία is best understood as a collective and thus referring to the various supernatural powers regarded as inhabiting the area above the earth and thus controlling in many respects both the behavior and the fate of people. See also 12.44.

12.44 · Supernatural Beings and Powers · Supernatural Powers

power, authority, lordship, ruler, wicked force (title for supernatural forces and powers) a supernatural power having some particular role in controlling the destiny and activities of human beings Some scholars have believed that it is possible to reconstruct at least in part some of the hierarchy represented by these various supernatural forces and powers, on the basis of the neoplatonic system of nine such powers arranged in three orders of three each. NT terminology and usage does not, however, lend itself to such a classification, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to determine what are the significant differences between these supernatural powers and forces.

For the most part, translators have endeavored to render the various terms in somewhat different ways, for example, ἐξουσία as ‘authority’; δύναμις as ‘power’; κυριότης as ‘ruler’; and phrases such as τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις as ‘wicked spiritual forces in the heavenly world.’ In a number of languages, however, there are simply not enough terms to designate various kinds of powers, authorities, and forces which could be employed in speaking of such supernatural impersonal powers. Accordingly, some translators have simply used a phrase such as ‘any and all kinds of supernatural powers.’ Where it is possible to make certain lexical distinctions between terms and phrases, this, of course, should be done, but in a number of contexts this may be impossible, and accordingly, some explanation in a marginal note may be required if the reader is to understand satisfactorily the intent of the passages in question.

In some instances a measure of meaning may be obtained by somewhat paraphrastic expressions. For example, EPH 2:2 is rendered in some languages as ‘at that time you lived in the way in which the spirit that governs this world dictated you should live. This is the way the one who rules over the power in space commanded you to live. This is the very spirit that now commands the people who disobey God.’

1 It would be possible to combine the meanings of ἀήρ[a] (1.6) and ἀήρ[c] (1.7) under a single generic definition of space above the earth. One could then leave it to the context to specify the particular area referred to. However, because of the relationship of ἀήρ[a] to the meaning of οὐρανός[a] (1.5) and the fact that in so many languages a distinct contrast in meaning is preserved for expressions designating the sky in contrast with the area immediately above the surface of the earth, it seems better to make a distinction at this point.

blood red liquid that circulates in the arteries and veins of humans and animals In MRK 5:25 it may be important to use a special term for blood, since this passage is a reference to the hemorrhaging of menstruation.

In JHN 19:34 (ἐξῆλθεν εὐθὺς αἷμα καὶ ὕδωρ ‘then blood and water came out’) it may be necessary to use a term which can refer to the lymph fluid rather than to water itself; otherwise the reader might understand the water as being urine (with the spear having pierced the bladder) or even possibly water that Jesus had presumably drunk and was still in his stomach. The real reference of ὕδωρ in JHN 19:34 is to the lymph fluid and not to water as such. It is simply a colorless fluid which was mixed with blood.

In REV 8:8 (καὶ ἐγένετο τὸ τρίτον τῆς θαλάσσης αἷμα ‘and a third of the sea became blood’) and REV 11:6 (καὶ ἐξουσίαν ἔχουσιν ἐπὶ τῶν ὑδάτων στρέφειν αὐτὰ εἰς αἷμα ‘and they had power over the waters to turn them into blood’) the reference may not be to blood as a substance but to the blood-like color of the objects in question.

death, violent death (a figurative extension of meaning of αἷμα[a] ‘blood,’ 8.64) the death of a person, generally as the result of violence or execution It is possible to interpret αἷμα in ROM 5:9 (δικαιωθέντες νῦν ἐν τῷ αἵματι αὐτοῦ ‘by his death we are put right with God’) as primarily a reference to physiological death. But in such contexts in which αἷμα is used in speaking of the death of Christ, there is no doubt an additional component derived from the occurrence of αἷμα in contexts speaking of atoning sacrifice. Therefore, one may analyze the meaning of αἷμα in such contexts as meaning ‘sacrificial death’ and not merely physiological death. In ROM 5:9 and similar contexts, a number of translators have preferred to preserve an often recurring phrase such as ‘the shedding of his blood.’ However, in English this can be somewhat ambiguous in that ‘the shedding of blood’ normally refers to the killing of someone else and not to experiencing death. Collocation: αἰὼν τοῦ κόσμου τούτου power, authority, lordship, ruler, wicked force title for supernatural forces and powers: a supernatural power having some particular role in controlling the destiny and activities of human beings Some scholars have believed that it is possible to reconstruct at least in part some of the hierarchy represented by these various supernatural forces and powers, on the basis of the neoplatonic system of nine such powers arranged in three orders of three each. NT terminology and usage does not, however, lend itself to such a classification, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to determine what are the significant differences between these supernatural powers and forces.

For the most part, translators have endeavored to render the various terms in somewhat different ways, for example, ἐξουσία as ‘authority’; δύναμις as ‘power’; κυριότης as ‘ruler’; and phrases such as τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις as ‘wicked spiritual forces in the heavenly world.’ In a number of languages, however, there are simply not enough terms to designate various kinds of powers, authorities, and forces which could be employed in speaking of such supernatural impersonal powers. Accordingly, some translators have simply used a phrase such as ‘any and all kinds of supernatural powers.’ Where it is possible to make certain lexical distinctions between terms and phrases, this, of course, should be done, but in a number of contexts this may be impossible, and accordingly, some explanation in a marginal note may be required if the reader is to understand satisfactorily the intent of the passages in question.

adjc. | -ov | αἰών

67.96 · Time · Duration of Time without Reference to Points or Units of Time: Time, Spend Time, Always, Eternal, Old, Immediately, Young eternal pertaining to an unlimited duration of time¹ The most frequent use of αἰώνιος in the NT is with ζωή ‘life’, for example, ἵνα πᾶς ὁ πιστεύων ἐν αὐτῷ ἔχω ζωὴν αἰώνιον ‘so that everyone who believes in him may have eternal life’ JHN 3:15. In combination with ζωή there is evidently not only a temporal element, but also a qualitative distinction. In such contexts, αἰώνιος evidently carries certain implications associated with αἰώνιος in relationship to divine and supernatural attributes. If one translates ‘eternal life’ as simply ‘never dying,’ there may be serious misunderstandings, since persons may assume that ‘never dying’ refers only to physical existence rather than to ‘spiritual death.’ Accordingly, some translators have rendered ‘eternal life’ as ‘unending real life,’ so as to introduce a qualitative distinction.

defiled, ritually unclean pertaining to being ritually unacceptable, either as the result of defilement or because of the very nature of the object itself (for example, ritually unacceptable animals) It is possible that there is some subtle distinction in meaning, particularly on a connotative level, between κοινός[b] and ἀκάθαρτος in ACT 10:14, but it is difficult to determine the precise differences of meaning on the basis of existing contexts. The two terms are probably used in ACT 10:14 primarily for the sake of emphasis.

1 As in the case of other so-called semantic derivatives, it seems best in this instance likewise to employ only evident glosses. One could, of course define the process of hearing as ‘perceiving by means of the ears,’ but such a definition would be unnecessarily artificial. 2 The idiom κνίθομαι τὴν ἀκοήν involves two quite distinct semantic features. One is the desire to be pleased, and the second is the means of such gratification, namely, what is heard. It would be possible to classify this idiom either under Sensory Events and States (Domain 24) or here in the domain of Attitudes and Emotions. Since in 2TI 4:3 the latter seems the more focal feature of meaning, the idiom is included at this point.

to hear a case, to provide a legal hearing, to hear a case in court to give a judicial hearing in a legal matter⁶ In some languages the most satisfactory way of speaking about ‘a court hearing’ is to describe the relationship between the principal participants. 1 As in the case of other so-called semantic derivatives, it seems best in this instance likewise to employ only evident glosses. One could, of course define the process of hearing as ‘perceiving by means of the ears,’ but such a definition would be unnecessarily artificial. 2 ἀκούω[b] in 24.58 differs significantly from ἀκούω[a] ‘to hear’ (24.52) in that ἀκούω[b] indicates the ability to do something, not merely the activity involved. 3 MAT 18:15 It is obvious that in the use of ἀκούω in MAT 18:15 there is more than mere sensory perception. There is acceptance of the truth of what is said and the evident willingness to respond appropriately. These two elements are much more in focus than the sensory process of listening. 4 Both ἀκούω[e] and ἐπιδέχομαι[b] involve an overlapping of domains, for there is an evident factor of perception in paying attention, but also a clear inference of subsequent obedience. 5 The meaning of ἀκούω[f] is an excellent example of a meaning which overlaps two domains, but since the focal element is not hearing but comprehending, ἀκούω[f] is classified in this subdomain. 6 ἀκούω[g] and διακούω apparently differ somewhat in meaning from ἀνακρίνω[b] (56.12) in that the former two seem to be more neutral in connotation and do not appear to imply later condemnation.

ἀκρίς (G0200)

noun, f. | -ίδος

4.47 · Animals · Insects

grasshopper, locust six-legged winged insect characterized by the fact that its third pair of legs is elongated and adapted to hopping; Acrididae family; moves in swarms that migrate to new areas, which they colonize; at other times lives solitary or in small groups; eaten cooked by toasting, grilling, frying, or broiling, though in some places they are also eaten raw; because of their large numbers and swarming characteristics, locusts were a symbol of a vast attacking army against which there was no defense and also a symbol of divine punishment The four NT contexts in which ἀκρίς occurs refer to these insects either as being edible (MAT 3:4; MRK 1:6) or as being very destructive (REV 9:3).

Some persons have assumed that the reference to grasshoppers being eaten by John the Baptist should be understood not as the insects but as carob pods, but there is neither linguistic nor cultural evidence to support such an interpretation.

In a number of parts of the world there are different kinds of grasshoppers/locusts, some of which are edible, and others which are not edible. It is therefore important in the contexts of MAT 3:4 and MRK 1:6 to select a term which designates edible insects.

uncircumcised, Gentiles, the Gentile world a collective for those who are uncircumcised In translating GAL 2:7 it is essential in some languages to avoid the impression that there are two gospels, one for the Jews and another for the Gentiles. One may, therefore, render GAL 2:7 as ‘I had been entrusted with the good news to the uncircumcised, just as Peter had been for the circumcised’ or even ‘God had given me and Peter the task of preaching the good news; I to the Gentiles and Peter to the Jews.’

adjc. | -α, -ον | ἄκρον + γωνία

7.44 · Constructions · Parts and Areas of Buildings

cornerstone, important stone the cornerstone or capstone of a building, essential to its construction (this term occurs in the NT only figuratively in reference to Christ) Some scholars have assumed that ἀκρογωνιαίος would refer to the capstone occurring at the high point of a peaked roof, but in the NT ἀκρογωνιαίος would probably refer to the type of stone which would have been used in the Temple in Jerusalem, and therefore it is far more likely to understand ἀκρογωνιαίος as a cornerstone rather than a capstone of a peaked roof. It would not have referred to the keystone of an arch. Since, however, in many societies the use of ‘cornerstone’ is not known and in others it may have an entirely different function, it may be more satisfactory to use an expression such as ‘the most important stone’ or ‘the very important stone.’ This serves to describe the function and significance of the cornerstone without trying to indicate precisely its location or form.

to apply salt to something, to restore the flavor to salt (a causative derivative of ἄλς ‘salt,’ 5.25) to cause something to taste salty In MAT 5:13 one may employ a causative such as ‘how will the salt be made salty again’ or ‘how can one cause the salt to return.’ In MRK 9:49 the meaning is particularly obscure. According to OT requirements sacrifices were to be salted (LEV 2:13), and it may be that in MRK 9:49 the fire is regarded as an equivalent of salt and as a symbol of suffering and sacrifice by which the disciple is tested.

1 MAT 5:13 · MRK 9:49 It would be possible to analyze the occurrence of ἀλίζω in MAT 5:13 and MRK 9:49 as representing two quite distinct meanings, in the first instance ‘to restore the taste of salt,’ and in the second instance ‘to cause something to taste salty.’ However, this type of distinction does not seem to be necessary, for one may define the meaning of ἀλίζω as ‘to cause something to taste salty.’ This would then apply either to salt itself which has previously lost its salty flavor or to a sacrifice which needs to be salted. However, as already noted, the meaning of ἀλίζω in MRK 9:49 is extremely obscure and can only be understood in a highly figurative sense.

In some languages expressions referring to the flowing of water from a spring depend upon the extent or continuity of such a flow. If the spring is a perennial one, that is to say, if it flows all the time, it may be designated by one term, while if it is intermittent, that is, flows only during the rainy season, it may be referred to by quite a different term. There may also be distinctions as to whether the water flows out and then down or whether it actually comes up from below the surface. In JHN 4:14 the direction of flow is not important, but it is important to use a term which would indicate continuous flowing.

61.7 · Sequence

alpha, the first, the beginning the first in a series, with implications of significance or importance This expression is explained in some manuscripts as ‘the beginning and the end’ and in others as ‘the first and the last’ and in REV 22:13 as both ‘the first and the last’ and ‘the beginning and the end.’ The combination of alpha and omega in secular literature came to designate the entire universe and all kinds of divine and demonic powers, so that in Revelation this title could refer to Christ’s dominion over the universe. In the use of such an expression as ‘the alpha and the omega,’ there is obviously also an important element of status.

threshing floor a surface of hard ground or stone where grain was threshed out, either by beating or having animals trample upon it The meaning of ἄλων as ‘threshing floor’ forms the basis for the figurative extension of meaning (a metonymy) referring to the threshed grain still lying on the threshing floor (see 3.43). The meaning may be made clear by rendering ‘to thresh out completely all of the grain.’ On the other hand, it is possible to interpret ἄλων in MAT 3:12 in a literal sense and translate ‘he will clean up his threshing floor,’ that is, by gathering up the grain and getting rid of the straw and chaff.

4.10 · Animals · Animals

fox, jackal animal looking like a longhaired dog with a pointed nose and a bushy tail; either reddish with white underparts (fox) or yellowish brown with red tips to the fur on the back (jackal); scavenger; associated with destruction and devastation, and also with being insignificant but self-important; also intelligent and quick-witted, crafty Though the Greek term ἄλώπηξ and the corresponding Hebrew terms used in the OT may refer to either a fox or a jackal, ἄλώπηξ in the NT seems to refer primarily to a fox (see Fauna and Flora of the Bible, pp. 31–32, for certain significant distinctions between foxes and jackals). In areas of the world where the fox is not known, one can sometimes speak of ‘a small wild dog’ or ‘an animal like a small wild dog.’ In other instances translators have borrowed the term ‘fox’ from a dominant language in the area and have then explained the appearance and habits of the animal in a glossary.

For ἄλώπηξ in a figurative sense as applied by Jesus to Herod Antipas, see 88.120.

wicked person, cunning person, fox (a figurative extension of meaning of ἄλώπηξ[a] ‘fox,’ 4.10) a wicked person, probably with the implication of being cunning and treacherous Some scholars, however, suggest that ἄλώπηξ in LUK 13:32 may imply ‘worthlessness.’

Rendering ἄλώπηξ in LUK 13:32 by a term meaning ‘fox’ may sometimes be misleading, since in some cultures the fox is regarded as a particularly wise animal, and therefore referring to a person as a fox may be a compliment. A local term for ‘fox’ may have other connotations which are quite undesirable. For example, in some languages a term for fox is used to designate a male or female prostitute, usually of the lowest grade.

guilt, sin the moral consequence of having sinned A number of languages make a clear distinction between the active event of committing sin and the resulting moral effect of guilt, so that one must speak of 'committing sin' but 'forgiving guilt.' This is often required in some languages since a term meaning 'to forgive' is literally 'to wipe away,' 'to erase,' 'to blot out,' or 'to return to someone.' The actual event of sinning often does not fit with such verb expressions, since it is not the event itself which is eliminated but the moral consequences of such an event, namely, the guilt.

noun, f. | -ου

2.28 · Natural Substances · Earth, Mud, Sand, Rock

sand ἄμμος[a] is primarily used in the NT in a figurative sense referring to things which cannot be counted. In such contexts, therefore, what is important is the abundance of sand and not its particular occurrence beside the sea. Therefore, in many contexts it is possible to say ‘as numerous as the grains of sand.’ In this way one need not specify the particular location if the meaning of innumerable quantity is fully evident.

In some areas of the world there is little or no sand, and therefore it may be necessary to render sand in MAT 7:26 as ‘loose soil’ or ‘unpacked dirt.’

1.64 · Geographical Objects and Features · Land in Contrast With the Sea

beach a sandy beach or shore ἄμμος[b] evidently involves a particular type of αἰγιαλός (1.63) which is sandy. For languages spoken by persons living along a seacoast, there are usually few if any problems involved in distinguishing various types of land bordering the sea, but for persons living in inland areas, it may be necessary to employ a descriptive phrase such as land along the sea and use such a phrase for various occurrences of different terms.

1 REV 12:18 It would be possible to regard ἡ ἄμμος τῆς θαλάσσης, literally ‘the sand of the sea,’ as a type of idiom meaning beach. Compare, for example, the meaning of ἄμμος[a] (2.28).

lamb young of sheep πρόβατον; often used for ritual sacrifice In a number of languages a clear distinction is made between male and female lambs. It is therefore essential in any figurative reference to male persons to employ an appropriate term for lamb. In a number of languages, of course, a lamb is simply referred to as a ‘young sheep’ or ‘child sheep.’

Perhaps the most widespread story about cultural differences in Bible translation is the one which refers to the translation of ‘lamb’ as ‘little seal of God’ in an Eskimo language. However, there is no evidence that this type of rendering was ever used, since in matters of appearance, habitat, and behavior, lambs and little seals have practically nothing in common. Furthermore, Eskimo languages have terms for ‘lamb’ and in some instances, at least, use the expression ‘young, woolly goat,’ since wild goats are well known and wool is well known as an imported product.

grapevine creeping plant that develops a woody stem when it matures; Vitis vinifera; grows along the ground until it finds a tree or other object to climb, using tendrils; bears bunches of small round fruit that are sweet and juicy; symbol of blessing, prosperity, and happiness A rendering of ἄμπελος as ‘vine’ rather than as ‘grapevine’ in JHN 15:1 may cause serious misunderstanding, since it might refer merely to a vine which does not produce fruit. Accordingly, if there is no particular expression for ‘grapevine,’ it may be more satisfactory in JHN 15:1 to speak of ‘fruit bush’ or ‘fruit plant.’ A term in JHN 15:1 which would indicate only jungle vines would also result in complete misunderstanding of the function of pruning (see 43.12), since such jungle vines are never pruned and in fact are only useful when they have been cut down and used for building purposes.

In some languages a grapevine may be referred to as ‘a bush producing grapes,’ and in certain other languages it is called ‘the wine plant.’

ἀναγεννάω (G0313)

verb | γεννάω

13.55 · Be, Become, Exist, Happen · Change of State

to cause to be born again, to be given new birth (a figurative extension of meaning of ἀναγεννάω ‘to be physically born again,’ not occurring in the NT) to cause to be changed as a form of spiritual rebirth In a number of languages the use of ἀναγεννάω in the sense of ‘to be born again spiritually’ is extremely difficult for people to understand, even as it was in biblical times. However, the concept is such an integral element in so much NT thought and teaching that the expression should be retained, though it may very well require some brief marginal explanation or at least significant cross-referencing. In its NT usage ἀναγεννάω, of course, has nothing to do with birth as such, but refers to a radical change in personality, with the attendant change in state, and it is for that reason that ἀναγεννάω is here classified in Domain 13 Be, Become, Exist, Happen. See also 41.53.

In the various contexts of the book of Acts it is preferable to use a term which implies a harbor, while in contexts which speak of the Sea of Galilee, movement would normally be from a beach (see 54.5).

1 ACT 12:4 One may assume from the use of ἀνάγω in ACT 12:4 that the prison was probably an underground prison, and Peter would then be led up to a courtroom which would be higher than the prison. 2 Though the Greek term ἀνάγω means literally ‘to lead up’ (see ἀνάγω[a] 15.176), it is not necessary in translating to always introduce the element of height or to translate it by some expression meaning ‘up.’ In ancient temples the idol or god was often on an elevated platform, and so one can readily understand how a term meaning ‘to bring up’ or ‘to carry up’ could readily acquire the meaning of ‘to carry up to’ or ‘to present to.’

1 There are no doubt certain contextual constraints involved in the choice of ἀναδέχομαι[a], ἀποδέχομαι[a], ἐπιδέχομαι[a], εἰσδέχομαι, ὑποδέχομαι, προσδέχομαι[b], and παραδέχομαι[b] in the sense that the spacial relationships involved in the welcoming of a guest can be reflected in the prepositional prefixes. For example, in LUK 8:40 the use of ἀποδέχομαι may focus upon the particular source, while ἐπιδέχομαι in 3JN 1:10 may be relevant in view of the fact that the believers are coming to a particular point. προσδέχομαι in LUK 15:2 may suggest a kind of reciprocal relationship which is established with outcasts, and παραδέχομαι in ACT 15:4 may simply point to spacial proximity. However, it would be wrong to insist upon clear distinctions in meaning based on the very limited number of contexts involved. Some of these same distinctions in spacial relations may exist for the set προσλαμβάνω[e], παραλαμβάνω[d], ἀπολαμβάνω[d]. 2 HEB 11:17 Though one may render ἀναδέχομαι in HEB 11:17 as ‘to receive,’ in reality the receiver is simply the individual who experiences either the event of promising or the content of the promises as expressed through subsequent events.

to come back to life, to live again, to be resurrected, resurrection to come back to life after having once died This word is also found as a variant reading: Χριστὸς καὶ ἀπέθανεν καὶ ἀνέστη καὶ ἀνέζησεν ‘Christ also died, rose, and lives again’ ROM 14:9 (apparatus).

In a number of languages there is a difficulty involved in formulating some expression for ‘resurrection’ or ‘living again,’ since such a phrase may refer to what is technically known as metempsychosis, that is to say, the rebirth of the soul in another existence, a belief which is widely held in a number of areas of south Asia. This problem may be avoided in some languages by speaking of ‘his body will live again’ or ‘his body will come back to life’ or ‘he will be the same person when he lives again.’

In LUK 15:24, ὅτι οὗτος ὁ υἱός μου νεκρὸς ἦν καὶ ἀνέζησεν ‘because this son of mine was dead and he has come back to life,’ the figurative hyperbole may reflect the practice of referring to a person as dead and then coming back to life if he has been completely separated for a time from all family relations, but then has later been discovered alive and well. It is possible, of course, that in LUK 15:24 the expression is an idiom, but it is more likely to be simply a figurative usage.

1 It is possible that the prefix ἀνα in ἀναζάω[b] could mean to come to life again, but in this particular context the force of repeated action seems to have been lost.

to eat a meal to eat a meal, with possible reference to the fact of the people reclining to eat¹ In biblical times there were apparently three different positions involved in the eating of a meal. People might, for example, (1) be seated on cushions around a low table or (2) be seated on chairs around a table or (3) recline on couches facing a table. Meals which involved reclining on couches would normally have been more elaborate, but the verbs ἀνάκειμαι[b] and κατάκειμαι[c] have been generalized in meaning to denote the eating of a meal without necessarily specifying the particular reclining position of those who participated in the meal.

For the translator, it may be extremely awkward to speak of ‘reclining to eat,’ since this may have connotations of people who are too lazy to sit up at the table or who are too sick to partake of an ordinary meal. It is for that reason that instead of rendering ἀνάκειμαι[b] or κατάκειμαι[c] as ‘to recline to eat,’ translators use expressions such as ‘to sit down to eat’ or ‘to eat a meal.’

MAT 9:10 · MRK 6:26 · MRK 16:14

17.25 · Stances and Events Related to Stances · Recline [to eat]

Collocation: ἀνάκειμαι ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ

to dine in the place of honor (an idiom, literally: to recline on the bosom) to take the place of honor at a meal These expressions in JHN 13:23 and JHN 13:25 would mean that the so-called ‘beloved disciple’ would be at the right of Jesus, since guests at a meal would be reclining on the left side so as to permit freedom of the right hand in dining. It may, of course, be that the same expression could be used of persons sitting at a table rather than reclining on couches.

Literal translations of ἀνάκειμαι ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ and ἀναπίπτω ἐπὶ τὸ στῆθος can result in serious misunderstanding, since they might imply overt homosexuality. There is no justification for reading into such idioms this type of implication.

¹ One would assume that ἀνάκειμαι[b] and κατάκειμαι[c] would have almost opposite meanings in view of the prefixes ἀνα and κατα. It is, of course, possible that ἀνάκειμαι[b] refers to being propped up on a couch where one was eating and κατάκειμαι[c] refers specifically to reclining, that is to say, lying down, but the contexts in which these two expressions occur do not provide a clear basis for such a distinction in meaning. In fact, the two are largely generalized to simply mean to eat a meal, though their etymological history may be significantly different.

Collocation: ἀναπίπτω ἐπὶ τὸ στῆθος

to dine in the place of honor (an idiom, literally: to recline on the bosom) to take the place of honor at a meal These expressions in JHN 13:23 and JHN 13:25 would mean that the so-called beloved disciple would be at the right of Jesus, since guests at a meal would be reclining on the left side so as to permit freedom of the right hand in dining. It may, of course, be that the same expression could be used of persons sitting at a table rather than reclining on couches.

Literal translations of ἀνάκειμαι ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ and ἀναπίπτω ἐπὶ τὸ στῆθος can result in serious misunderstanding, since they might imply overt homosexuality. There is no justification for reading into such idioms this type of implication.

This expression (ἀναπεσὼν ... ἐπὶ τὸ στῆθος) in JHN 13:25 (following on ἀνακείμενος ... ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ in JHN 13:23) seems to be typical of the tendency of the Gospel of John to employ relatively close synonyms with essentially the same meaning. It is possible, however, in view of the aorist participle in JHN 13:25 that the phrase ἀναπεσὼν ἐπὶ τὸ στῆθος could also be understood in a more literal sense to mean ‘to move closer to the side (of Jesus).’

to come back to life, to live again, to be resurrected, resurrection to come back to life after having once died In a number of languages there is a difficulty involved in formulating some expression for ‘resurrection’ or ‘living again,’ since such a phrase may refer to what is technically known as metempsychosis, that is to say, the rebirth of the soul in another existence, a belief which is widely held in a number of areas of south Asia. This problem may be avoided in some languages by speaking of ‘his body will live again’ or ‘his body will come back to life’ or ‘he will be the same person when he lives again.’

One may also translate ‘there is no resurrection’ as ‘people will not live again.’

Collocation: ἀνατολή ἐξ ὕψους

the dawn from on high (an idiom, literally: dawning from on high) the bright dawn of salvation (or possibly to be understood as a title for the Messiah) The expression ἀνατολή ἐξ ὕψους occurs in a highly poetic liturgical passage in Luke 1, and many translators have preferred to retain the more or less literal rendering. Others, however, have interpreted this as the dawning of salvation and have therefore translated ἐπισκέπεται ἡμᾶς ἀνατολή ἐξ ὕψους as ‘salvation will dawn upon us from heaven’ or ‘from heaven salvation will come to us as the dawn does.’ If one wishes to employ ἀνατολή ἐξ ὕψους as simply a title for the Messiah, one can translate ‘the Messiah will come to us,’ but it is normally better to preserve the figurative expression and relate it to the coming of the Messiah as ‘the Messiah will come to us even as the dawn does from on high.’ One may also treat the problem of interpretation in a footnote.

Some have interpreted the phrase ἄνευ τοῦ πατρὸς ὑμῶν as meaning ‘without your Father’s consent,’ while others interpret it as meaning ‘without your Father’s knowledge.’ The particular manner or mode of involvement by God must depend upon the broader context and not upon the meaning of ἄνευ.

The phrase ἄνευ λόγου in 1PE 3:1 is semantically equivalent to an event, for it means essentially ‘without their saying a word’ or ‘without them saying anything.’

There is no way of knowing from the context of COL 4:10 what the specific relationship is between Mark and Barnabas, but for languages which have no general term for cousins, but only specific terms for parallel cousins or cross cousins, it is necessary to select one or another of these specific terms in speaking of Mark. 9.1 · People · Human Beings

(in the singular) person, human being, individual, (in the plural) people, persons, mankind a human being (normally an adult) In MAT 14:35 (ἐπιγινόντες αὐτὸν οἱ ἄνδρες τοῦ τόπου ἐκείνου ‘when the people of that place recognized him’) one may argue that οἱ ἄνδρες refers specifically to males, but the context would seem to indicate that the reference is to people in general. In translation a pronominal expression may frequently be employed when ἀνὴρ[b] occurs in the text, for example, ‘when those who lived in that place recognized him.’

It is not uncommon in languages for a term which is often used to refer to an adult male to be employed also in a generic sense of ‘person.’ This is especially true when such terms are used in the plural form.

In a number of instances, generic meanings of receptor languages have not been recognized as such, since translators have assumed that such receptor-language terms refer only to members of a particular tribe or group (because they have been found only in specific contexts), while in reality such terms often designate people in general. One must, however, be on the alert for seemingly generic terms which refer only to the so-called ‘in-group,’ that is to say, members of a particular tribe, society, or community.

The parallelism in the ROM 4:8 quotation from PSA 32:1-PSA 32:2 indicates clearly that the reference of ἀνὴρ is not a particular male but any person.

In a number of instances, generic meanings of receptor languages have not been recognized as such, since translators have assumed that such receptor-language terms refer only to members of a particular tribe or group (because they have been found only in specific contexts), while in reality such terms often designate people in general. One must, however, be on the alert for seemingly generic terms which refer only to the so-called ‘in-group,’ that is to say, members of a particular tribe, society, or community.

husband a man who is married to a woman ἄνθρωπος in the meaning of ‘husband’ is normally clearly marked by context, usually involving a so- called ‘possessive marker,’ though in some contexts such as JHN 4:17 and MAT 19:10, the distinctions in meaning are quite clear, but it is only from each individual context that one can determine whether ἄνθρωπος means simply ‘man’ (see 9.24) or ‘husband.’ See also discussion at 10.54.

Collocation: ὁ ἔξω ἄνθρωπος

body, physical form (an idiom, literally: the outside person) the physical nature or aspect of a person The phrase ὁ ἔξω ἄνθρωπος is to be understood in direct contrast with ὁ ἔσω (ἄνθρωπος) in the same verse, which refers to the psychological or spiritual nature of human personality (see 26.1).

26.1 · Psychological Faculties

Collocation: ὁ ἔσω (ἄνθρωπος) · ὁ ἐν τῷ κρυπτῷ (ἄνθρωπος)

the inner being, the inmost being, inwardly (idioms, literally: the inner (person), and: the hidden (person)) the psychological faculty, including intellectual, emotional, and spiritual aspects, in contrast with the purely physical aspects of human existence In a number of languages it is quite impossible to speak of the psychological faculty of a person as being merely 'that which is within.' It is frequently necessary to refer to a particular organ of the body, for example, 'the heart' or 'the liver' or 'the spleen.' In some languages, however, one may refer to this faculty as being 'the person who stands inside' or 'the real person' or even 'the other person.'

In LUK 17:21 the phrase ἐντὸς ὑμῶν in the statement ἰδοὺ γὰρ ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ ἐντὸς ὑμῶν ἐστίν look, God's reign is within you may constitute a reference to the same inner being designated by the phrases ὁ ἔσω and ὁ ἐν τῷ κρυπτῷ. On this basis some scholars have suggested that the phrase ἐντὸς ὑμῶν can be interpreted as a potentiality for participation and hence be translated within your grasp, but it is more likely that one should understand the phrase ἐντὸς ὑμῶν in LUK 17:21 as a spacial relationship, for example, 'in your midst' or 'among you' (see 83.9).

Collocation: υἱοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων

people, mankind (a Semitic idiom, literally: sons of men) human beings (equivalent in denotative meaning to ἄνθρωπος[a], 9.1) It is rare indeed that one can reproduce literally the Semitic phrase 'sons of men,' since the expression is likely to be interpreted as relating only to the male offspring of fathers.

MRK 3:28 · EPH 3:5

9.3 · People · Human Beings

Collocation: υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου

Son of Man a title with Messianic implications used by Jesus concerning himself This title 'Son of Man' served not only to affirm but also to hide Christ's Messianic role.

In a number of languages there are serious complications involved in a literal translation of υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου 'Son of Man.' In the first place, this is likely to be understood in a more or less literal sense of 'son of a man' and thus a denial of the virgin birth. Such is particularly true in languages which have two words for 'son,' one meaning 'son of a man' and the other, 'son of a woman.' Under such circumstances, a literal translation would be a clear denial of the virgin birth.

to come back to life, to live again, to be resurrected, resurrection to come back to life after having once died In a number of languages there is a difficulty involved in formulating some expression for 'resurrection' or 'living again,' since such a phrase may refer to what is technically known as metempsychosis, that is to say, the rebirth of the soul in another existence, a belief which is widely held in a number of areas of south Asia. This problem may be avoided in some languages by speaking of 'his body will live again' or 'his body will come back to life' or 'he will be the same person when he lives again.'

adjc. | -ον | ἄ- + νοέω

32.50 · Understand · Lack of Capacity for Understanding foolish, stupid, without understanding pertaining to unwillingness to use one's mental faculties in order to understand As in the case of ἄσύνετος (32.49), the meaning of ἄνόητος is that people presumably would not use their capacity for understanding and as a result, thought and behaved foolishly. ἄνόητος does not imply the mental state of being an idiot or imbecile.

without the Law pertaining to being without the Law (specifically the first five books of the OT) Even from the two contexts of 1CO 9:21 and ROM 2:12, it should be clear that ἄνομος[b] and ἀνόμως carry quite different implications in different contexts. In 1CO 9:21 a phrase such as ‘without the Law’ must be understood in the sense of ‘not being under obligation to the Law’ or ‘not being bound by the Law,’ and so 1CO 9:21 must be translated in a number of languages as ‘with those who are not bound by the Law, I live as one who is not bound by the Law,’ referring in these instances to the Law of Moses. It is important, however, in rendering the expression ‘not bound by the Law’ to avoid a phrase which would mean ‘lawless’ or ‘heedless of the Law.’ In the case of ROM 2:12, the phrase ‘without the Law’ must refer to those who are ignorant of the Law and thus are not bound by it, and so ROM 2:12 must be rendered in some languages as ‘those who sin without knowing anything about the Law are lost, but quite apart from any relationship to the Law.’

For another interpretation of ἄνομος in 1CO 9:21, see 11.42.

11.42 · Groups and Classes of Persons and Members of Such Groups and Classes · Socio-Religious Gentile, heathen, pagan a non-Jew who lives completely without reference to the Jewish Law For another interpretation of ἄνομος in 1CO 9:21, see 33.57.

In a number of contexts, it may be best to speak of ‘Gentiles’ as ‘those who are not Jews.’ In some languages the equivalent of ‘Gentiles’ is simply ‘foreigners,’ but one must be very certain that the use of a term meaning ‘foreigners’ will actually designate non-Jews rather than those people who do not speak the particular receptor language.

It would be a serious mistake to render ἄνομος as ‘lawless’ on the basis of its etymology. To speak of a ‘lawless person’ is to imply that he transgresses existing laws rather than being one who is not subject to the Mosaic Law.

In the NT ἄνυδρος occurs in the figurative expressions ‘waterless springs’ (2PE 2:17) and ‘waterless clouds.’ A phrase such as ‘waterless springs’ may be rendered simply as ‘springs in which there is no water,’ but in some languages such a phrase would seem to be a complete contradiction, since a term for ‘spring’ would imply the existence of water. It may therefore be necessary to translate ‘waterless springs’ as ‘springs which have ceased to produce water.’ ‘Waterless clouds’ are often best rendered as ‘clouds which will not produce rain’ or ‘clouds from which no rain will fall.’ In JUD 1:12 the phrase ‘waterless clouds’ is a description of persons whose teaching and behavior are of no value in building up the faith of believers. Such a metaphor must often be changed into a simile, for example, ‘they are like clouds which do not produce rain.’

33.277 · Communication · Admit, Confess, Deny

to deny to say that one does not know about or is in any way related to a person or event¹ In translating ἄρνέομαι[a] and ἀπαρνέομαι[a], one can often use an equivalent phrase such as ‘to say that one does not know’ or ‘to say that one has nothing to do with.’

It is also possible to deny having done something, and therefore one may translate the response in LUK 8:45 as ‘but they all said that they did not do it’ or ‘... that they did not touch him.’

to disregard, to pay no attention to, to say no to to refuse to give thought to or express concern for² There are a number of problems involved in rendering appropriately ἄρνέομαι[d] and ἀπαρνέομαι[b] as in LUK 9:23 and MRK 8:34.

In a number of languages it simply makes no sense to translate ‘to say No to oneself,’ nor is it possible in many instances to use an expression such as ‘to deny oneself,’ since it almost always implies to deny oneself something. Sometimes the meaning may be expressed in a figurative or idiomatic manner, for example, ‘to refuse to pay attention to what one’s own desires are saying’ or ‘to refuse to think about what one just wants for oneself.’ In certain instances other kinds of idioms may be employed, for example, ‘to put oneself at the end of the line’ or even ‘to say to one’s heart, Keep quiet.’

34.49 · Association · Establish or Confirm a Relation to deny, to reject to deny strongly, with the implication of rejection

1 It is quite possible that ἀπαρνέομαι[a] is somewhat more forceful in meaning than ἄρνέομαι[a], but this cannot be demonstrated from NT usage. 2 ἀπαρνέομαι[b] appears to be somewhat more forceful in meaning than ἄρνέομαι[d].

MRK 16:11 · LUK 24:11 · LUK 24:41

31.97 · Hold a View, Believe, Trust · Trust, Rely

to not believe (in), to refuse to believe, to not trust in, unbelief to refuse to put one’s trust or reliance in something or someone¹ One of the serious problems involved in rendering ‘to believe’ or ‘to refuse to believe’ is that so frequently the NT text does not indicate precisely the goal or object of such belief.

In a number of languages, however, the syntactic requirements are such that some clear goal must be in the immediate context. For example, in MRK 16:16 it may be possible to translate ‘whoever refuses to believe the good news shall be condemned.’

to not be a believer, to be a non-Christian, to be an infidel, not believing, to be a pagan to not believe in the good news about Jesus Christ and hence not become a follower²

ACT 28:24 · ROM 3:3 · 2TI 2:13 · 1PE 2:7

1 In contrast with ἀπιστέω[a] (31.39) meaning to not believe that something is true, ἀπιστέω[b] (and ἀπιστία[b]) involve a refusal to put one's trust, reliance, or belief in something or someone. ἀπιστέω[b] thus has a number of significant added components of meaning. 2 The same factors apply to the classification of ἀπιστέω[c] and ἀπιστία[c] as apply to the classification of πιστεύω[c] and πίστις[d] (31.102), in view of the fact that a set of specific beliefs or relationships is clearly implied.

ἀπιστία

ἀπιστία (G0570)

noun, f. | -ας | ἄ- + πιστεύω

lacking in trustworthiness, unfaithfulness the state of being someone in whom confidence cannot be placed The occurrence of both ἀπιστία and πίστις (31.88) in this expression in ROM 3:3 may cause certain difficulties in appropriately rendering the meaning in other languages. It may therefore be necessary to spell out in some detail the fuller implications of ἀπιστία and πίστις. Moreover, the question implies a negative response, but the question (since it is rhetorical) can easily be rendered as a strong negative statement, for example, 'the fact that they were persons who could not be trusted does not mean that God cannot be trusted.'

long ago, some time ago (an idiom, literally: from ancient days) a point of time preceding another point of time, with a considerable interval This reference to Peter having been chosen by God sometime before to bring the gospel to the Gentiles can hardly be regarded as a reference to ancient times, though some persons understand this to mean that God's decision was made at the beginning of time. The usage of ἀφ' ἡμερῶν ἀρχαίων is probably designed to emphasize the established nature of God's decision for Peter to take the gospel to the Gentiles beginning with the centurion Cornelius. The fact that this was relatively early in the development of the church may also serve to explain the use of the idiom.

1 MRK 8:11 In MRK 8:11 (see 84.3) and MAT 16:1 (see 84.4) there is a clear overlap of reference between ἀπό[c] and ἐκ[a]. 2 JHN 11:18 In JHN 11:18 ἀπό with a statement of measurement may be analyzed as marking the extent of the measurement from a particular point. 3 In most instances ἀπό as a marker of agent involves communication, but an expression such as occurs in MAT 20:20 may very well give rise to the use of ἀπό in the double sense of both agent and source of communication.

In the phrase αἰτοῦσά τι ἀπ' αὐτοῦ seeking something from him, the immediate response would have been a communication of a promise, so that the ἀπό would clearly reflect not only the immediate agent of the promise but the ultimate source for the requested benefit. 4 LUK 24:21 The phrase ἄφ' οὗ 'since' is best interpreted as an elliptical expression in which the relative pronoun οὗ refers to a specific temporal element or to an elliptical one, as occurs in a number of instances. 5 No doubt the meanings in this series differ somewhat, but it is not possible on the basis of the contexts now available to determine precisely what designative or associative features of meaning may be involved.

1 It is possible that ἀπόδειξις should be classified as having a meaning somewhat distinct from ἔνδειξις and ἔνδειγμα and thus be more closely related to ἀποδείκνυμι[a] (28.50), but there is no clear evidence of this in existing contexts. 2 As in the case of βέβαιος[c] (28.43), βέβαιοω[b] (28.43), and βεβαίωσις (28.44), there are two distinct sets of semantic features in the series ἔνδειξις, ἔνδειγμα, and ἀπόδειξις. The element of showing or demonstrating implies clearly making something known, but that which is made known is done in a clear, convincing, and confirming manner and therefore shown to be certain or true. This double set of semantic features is contained in such terms as proof, evidence and confirmation.

1 There are no doubt certain contextual constraints involved in the choice of ἀναδέχομαι[a], ἀποδέχομαι[a], ἐπιδέχομαι[a], εἰσδέχομαι, ὑποδέχομαι, προσδέχομαι[b], and παραδέχομαι[b] in the sense that the spacial relationships involved in the welcoming of a guest can be reflected in the prepositional prefixes. For example, in LUK 8:40 the use of ἀποδέχομαι may focus upon the particular source, while ἐπιδέχομαι in 3JN 1:10 may be relevant in view of the fact that the believers are coming to a particular point. προσδέχομαι in LUK 15:2 may suggest a kind of reciprocal relationship which is established with outcasts, and παραδέχομαι in ACT 15:4 may simply point to spacial proximity. However, it would be wrong to insist upon clear distinctions in meaning based on the very limited number of contexts involved. Some of these same distinctions in spacial relations may exist for the set προσλαμβάνω[e], παραλαμβάνω[d], ἀπολαμβάνω[d].

to sell to dispose of property or provide services in exchange for money or other valuable considerations πιπράσκω and ἀποδίδομαι (ἀποδίδωμι[e]) may also be used to refer to selling a person into slavery. Note, for example, πιπράσκω in MAT 18:25 (ἐκέλευσεν αὐτὸν ὁ κύριος πρᾶθῃναι ‘his master ordered him to be sold as a slave’) and ἀποδίδομαι in ACT 7:9 (οἱ πατριάρχαι ζηλώσαντες τὸν Ἰωσήφ ἀπέδοντο εἰς Αἴγυπτον ‘the patriarchs were jealous of Joseph and sold him to be a slave in Egypt’).

In a number of languages, however, it may be important to use a distinctive term for selling a person into slavery. In fact, it may be necessary to describe the event rather explicitly, for example, ‘to receive money for handing a person over to someone else to be a slave.’

In ROM 7:14 πιπράσκω is used figuratively in the phrase πεπραμένος ὑπὸ τὴν ἁμαρτίαν ‘sold as a slave to sin,’ in the sense that sin is personified as the master.

ἀποθνήσκω (G0599)

verb | fut. ἀποθανοῦμαι · aor. ἀπέθανον | θνήσκω

to die, death the process of dying In a number of languages clear distinctions are made in the use of terms for dying on the basis of the manner or circumstances of death. For example, one term may refer to death primarily as the result of old age, while another term may refer to death caused by sickness, and still other terms may be used for death caused by violence. Careful distinctions must be used in determining the choice of terms based on particular contexts.

In JHN 6:50 ἀποθνήσκω must be understood in a spiritual rather than in a strictly literal sense. This bold figurative language is characteristic of the Gospel of John and should not be eliminated, though in some languages a strictly literal translation may be understood only in a literal sense and thus lead to misinterpretation. In some instances, therefore, it may be necessary to suggest the metaphorical significance by translating ‘he will not, as it were, die.’

40.1 · Reconciliation, Forgiveness · Reconciliation

to reconcile, to make things right with one another, reconciliation to reestablish proper friendly interpersonal relations after these have been disrupted or broken (the componential features of this series of meanings involve (1) disruption of friendly relations because of (2) presumed or real provocation (3) overt behavior designed to remove hostility, and (4) restoration of original friendly relations)¹ Because of the variety and complexity of the components involved in reconciliation, it is often necessary to use an entire phrase in order to communicate satisfactorily the meanings of the terms in this subdomain. In some languages, however, reconciliation is often spoken of in idiomatic terms, for example, ‘to cause to become friends again,’ ‘to cause to snap fingers again’ (a symbol of friendly interpersonal relations in many parts of Africa), ‘to cause to be one again,’ or ‘to take away the separation.’ A particularly crucial element in terms for reconciliation is the assigning of responsibility for original guilt in causing the estrangement. Some terms, for example, imply that the individual who initiates reconciliation is by doing so admitting his guilt in causing the estrangement. This, of course, provides a completely untenable meaning for reconciliation in speaking of God reconciling people to himself through Christ.

In a number of languages the contextual basis for an expression for reconciliation is often found in terms relating to the reconciliation of husbands and wives. Such expressions fit in well with many contexts in the Scriptures, especially in speaking of reconciliation of people to God, since God is frequently referred to as the husband and the believers as the wife.

to do away with, to eliminate (a figurative extension of meaning of ἀποκτείνω[a] ‘to kill,’ 20.61) to cause a state to cease, with the implication of strong emphasis and forceful action In EPH 2:16 there is a subtle rhetorical device employed in ascribing to Christ the activity of ‘killing,’ when in reality he was the one who was killed on the cross in order to make life possible.

1 Though some semanticists have analyzed terms meaning to kill as being simply a causative relating to death, that is, to cause to die or to cause to no longer live, this does not seem to be a satisfactory manner in which to treat the essential semantic components of expressions meaning to kill, to murder, to execute, etc. Though from the standpoint of propositional logic the results of the activities are essentially the same, nevertheless, the manner in which the death is produced is certainly different. The meaning of to kill involves unnatural death, normally a degree of violence, and often evil intent.

1 There are no doubt certain contextual constraints involved in the choice of ἀναδέχομαι[a], ἀποδέχομαι[a], ἐπιδέχομαι[a], εἰσδέχομαι, ὑποδέχομαι, προσδέχομαι[b], and παραδέχομαι[b] in the sense that the spacial relationships involved in the welcoming of a guest can be reflected in the prepositional prefixes. For example, in LUK 8:40 the use of ἀποδέχομαι may focus upon the particular source, while ἐπιδέχομαι in 3JN 1:10 may be relevant in view of the fact that the believers are coming to a particular point. προσδέχομαι in LUK 15:2 may suggest a kind of reciprocal relationship which is established with outcasts, and παραδέχομαι in ACT 15:4 may simply point to spacial proximity. However, it would be wrong to insist upon clear distinctions in meaning based on the very limited number of contexts involved. Some of these same distinctions in spacial relations may exist for the set προσλαμβάνω[e], παραλαμβάνω[d], ἀπολαμβάνω[d]. 2 There are no doubt certain subtle distinctions of meaning in this series of related expressions in 90.63 (ἀπολαμβάνω[e], ἐπιλαμβάνομαι[f], λαμβάνω[h], μεταλαμβάνω[b]), but it is difficult to determine the precise distinctions on the basis of existing contexts. As in the case of a number of verbs which mark an experiencer relation, an equivalent translation consists simply of a passive form of a verb related to the noun complement. For example, in the case of JHN 7:23, one might very well translate ‘if a person is circumcised on the Sabbath.’

to ruin, to destroy, destruction to destroy or to cause the destruction of persons, objects, or institutions In a number of languages it is difficult to find a general term for ‘destruction.’ What has often happened is the extension of meaning from a more specific type of reference, for example, ‘to smash,’ to a more generic meaning of ‘to destroy,’ and whether one understands the specific or more generic meaning depends largely upon the context. Accordingly, in ACT 8:3 one may find a figurative usage of a term meaning ‘to smash’ (though understood in a more generic sense), for example, ‘Saul then worked in order to smash the church.’

to divorce, to separate to dissolve the marriage bond Expressions for divorce are often based on terms meaning literally ‘to send away,’ ‘to separate from,’ or ‘to leave one another.’ However, in a number of languages idiomatic expressions are employed, for example ‘to send him off with his clothes,’ ‘to untie the knot between them,’ or ‘to throw away her hearthstones.’ Some persons have attempted to make an important distinction between ἀφίημι in 1CO 7:11 and χωρίζω in 1CO 7:15 on the assumption that ἀφίημι implies legal divorce, while χωρίζω only relates to separation. Such a distinction, however, seems to be quite artificial.

to pardon, to forgive, forgiveness to remove the guilt resulting from wrongdoing It is extremely important to note that the focus in the meanings of ἀφίημι[f], ἄφεσις[a], and ἀπολύω[e] is upon the guilt of the wrongdoer and not upon the wrongdoing itself. The event of wrongdoing is not undone, but the guilt resulting from such an event is pardoned. To forgive, therefore, means essentially to remove the guilt resulting from wrongdoing.

Some languages make a clear distinction between guilt and sin, and terms for forgiveness are therefore related to guilt and not to the wrongdoing. Therefore, ‘to forgive sins’ is literally ‘to forgive guilt.’ Though terms for ‘forgiveness’ are often literally ‘to wipe out,’ ‘to blot out,’ or ‘to do away with,’ it is obviously not possible to blot out or to wipe out an event, but it is possible to remove or obliterate the guilt.

1 It is possible that ἀπολύω[a] and ἀφίημι[a] differ somewhat in meaning in that ἀπολύω[a] may suggest more permission and ἀφίημι[a] more dismissal, but this cannot be determined from NT usage. In ACT 15:30, however, οἱ ... ἀπολυθέντες implies clearly being sent (see ἀπολύω[b], 15.66). 2 It is possible that ἀπολύω[c] is somewhat more emphatic in meaning than λύω[b] in view of the prepositional prefix ἀπο, but NT contexts are not sufficient to indicate any precise degree of distinction. noun, n. | -τος | σκιά shadow the shape or shade cast by an object which blocks rays of light In a number of languages a term for ‘shadow’ has a number of very important meanings. In some instances it is regarded as a part of personality which goes on to the next world, since a dead person no longer ‘casts a shadow.’ The shadow may also be regarded as a kind of counterpart of the personality, a type of alter ego. In cases of severe illness one may say ‘his shadow has walked away,’ and in many parts of the world the shadow of a person is an important element in the practice of black magic, for to damage a shadow may be regarded as a means of causing harm to a person.

In JAS 1:17 one may translate ‘shifting shadow’ as ‘a shadow which constantly changes.’

68.22 · Aspect · Complete, Finish, Succeed

to complete, to finish, to end, to accomplish to bring an activity to a successful finish¹ It is also possible to translate ἀποτελέω in LUK 13:32 as ‘am performing,’ but the focus evidently is upon the completion of a series of such healings. The final phrase of LUK 13:32, καὶ τῇ τρίτῳ τελειοῦμαι ‘and on the third day I will be finished,’ points to a possible distinction between ἀποτελέω and τελειόω, in which the first apparently serves to mark the end of a particular series, while the second points to the completion of anything and everything involved.

LUK 13:32 · JAS 1:15

¹ There are no doubt certain subtle distinctions, particularly of emphasis, in the series τελέω, ἐκτελέω[a], ἀποτελέω, ἐπιτελέω[a], συντελέω[a], and τελειόω[c], but it is not possible to determine with precision the particular distinctions on the basis of existing contexts, though possibly ἐκτελέω and ἀποτελέω emphasize more finality, while ἐπιτελέω[a] may focus upon the resulting purpose.

In other words, the focus is upon the absence of an object from a place rather than the movement involved in removal.

16.8 · Non-Linear Movement

to shake off, to shake out, to shake from to shake something out or off, in order to get rid of an object or a substance In a number of languages quite different terms for shaking will be required for the contexts of ACT 28:5 and LUK 9:5, since in the first instance it is an animate being which clings, and in the second instance it is simply a substance that adheres.

In a number of languages, however, the symbolic meaning of ‘shaking dust off one’s feet’ is not at all clear, so that it may be necessary to add a type of classifier to indicate that such an action symbolizes the breaking off of association. It is for this reason that the expression ἐκτιναζάμενος τὰ ἱμάτια in ACT 18:6 is often translated as ‘he protested by shaking the dust from his clothes.’

to move away, to disappear to move away from a normal location, with the implication of disappearing It would be difficult to translate ἀποχωρίζομαι in REV 6:14 as meaning literally ‘to go away,’ for this would seem strange in a reference to the sky. If, however, one employs an expression meaning to disappear, it may be necessary to say literally ‘could no longer be seen.’ For another interpretation of ἀποχωρίζομαι in REV 6:14, see 63.30.

destruction act of destroying or causing the destruction of persons, objects, or institutions In a number of languages it is difficult to find a general term for ‘destruction.’ What has often happened is the extension of meaning from a more specific type of reference, for example, ‘to smash,’ to a more generic meaning of ‘to destroy,’ and whether one understands the specific or more generic meaning depends largely upon the context. Accordingly, in ACT 8:3 one may find a figurative usage of a term meaning ‘to smash’ (though understood in a more generic sense), for example, ‘Saul then worked in order to smash the church.’

waste, ruin an action demonstrating complete disregard for the value of something In the context of MRK 14:4 the understanding of ἀπώλεια in the literal sense of ‘destruction’ (see 20.31) does not seem to be adequate. The following verse concerning the three hundred denarii would seem to indicate that it was disregard for the value of something rather than destroying the perfume. In fact, the use of the perfume would not have been a matter of destroying. Accordingly, an equivalent of ‘waste’ seems to be far more satisfactory. In some languages the equivalent of this question in MRK 14:4 is ‘why did she not think about the value of the perfume?’

lamb young of sheep (πρόβατον); often used for ritual sacrifice In a number of languages a clear distinction is made between male and female lambs. It is therefore essential in any figurative reference to male persons to employ an appropriate term for lamb. In a number of languages, of course, a lamb is simply referred to as a ‘young sheep’ or ‘child sheep.’

Perhaps the most widespread story about cultural differences in Bible translation is the one which refers to the translation of ‘lamb’ as ‘little seal of God’ in an Eskimo language. However, there is no evidence that this type of rendering was ever used, since in matters of appearance, habitat, and behavior, lambs and little seals have practically nothing in common. Furthermore, Eskimo languages have terms for ‘lamb’ and in some instances, at least, use the expression ‘young, woolly goat,’ since wild goats are well known and wool is well known as an imported product.

In languages where a term for bear is not known, it is probably best to borrow a word and describe the referent in a footnote or glossary. In REV 13:2 a somewhat descriptive phrase is sometimes employed, for example, ‘with large feet having claws like those of an animal called bear.’ By this means the information about the bear’s feet has been incorporated into the text, but usually it is better to leave such information to a marginal note.

to deny to say that one does not know about or is in any way related to a person or event¹ In translating ἀρνέομαι[a] and ἀπαρνέομαι[a], one can often use an equivalent phrase such as ‘to say that one does not know’ or ‘to say that one has nothing to do with.’

In denying an event, as in LUK 8:45, it may be possible to translate ‘but they all said they knew nothing about it.’ It is also possible to deny having done something, and therefore one may translate the response in LUK 8:45 as ‘but they all said that they did not do it’ or ‘... that they did not touch him.’

34.48 · Association · Establish or Confirm a Relation to deny to deny any relationship of association with someone In a number of languages one may best translate ‘deny’ as ‘to make manifest not to know.’ Accordingly, one may translate the first part of LUK 12:9 as ‘whoever shows people that he does not know me’ or ‘whoever refuses to admit that he does know me.’ Denial need not involve some verbal formulation, though in some languages this is the most common practice. See also 33.277.

30.52 · Think · To Think About, with the Implied Purpose of Responding Appropriately

to disregard, to pay no attention to, to say no to to refuse to give thought to or express concern for² There are a number of problems involved in rendering appropriately ἀρνέομαι[d] and ἀπαρνέομαι[b] as in LUK 9:23 and MRK 8:34.

In a number of languages it simply makes no sense to translate ‘to say No to oneself,’ nor is it possible in many instances to use an expression such as ‘to deny oneself,’ since it almost always implies to deny oneself something. Sometimes the meaning may be expressed in a figurative or idiomatic manner, for example, ‘to refuse to pay attention to what one’s own desires are saying’ or ‘to refuse to think about what one just wants for oneself.’ In certain instances other kinds of idioms may be employed, for example, ‘to put oneself at the end of the line’ or even ‘to say to one’s heart, Keep quiet.’

to be false to oneself, to be untrue to oneself to behave in a way which is untrue to one’s real self, in a sense of denying certain valid aspects of one’s personality It is possible in some languages to translate ‘he cannot be false to himself’ in 2TI 2:13 as ‘he cannot be different from what he really is’ or ‘he cannot be otherwise than good.’

1 It is quite possible that ἀπαρνέομαι[a] is somewhat more forceful in meaning than ἀρνέομαι[a], but this cannot be demonstrated from NT usage. 2 ἀπαρνέομαι[b] appears to be somewhat more forceful in meaning than ἀρνέομαι[d].

In such a context the reference is undoubtedly to a ‘ram,’ that is to say, the adult male of sheep.

4.26 · Animals · Animals

Lamb a title for Christ ἀρνίον[c] as a title of Jesus Christ occurs only in the book of Revelation, but it is used there more than twenty times. In contrast with ἀρνίον[b] in βόσκε τὰ ἀρνία μου ‘feed my lambs’ (JHN 21:15; see 11.29), designating people who need care and help, the supplementary components of meaning in ἀρνίον[c] involve the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ on the cross. Some persons have wanted to eliminate the notion of ‘lamb’ in this title, especially in the case of languages in which sheep are looked down on as relatively worthless scavengers (as is the case in certain tropical areas of the world), but in view of the significance of the symbolism of ‘lamb’ in terms of OT sacrificial practices, it is wrong to avoid a term meaning ‘lamb.’ A marginal note, however, may be necessary to explain the significance of this title.

Since ἄρπαγμός may mean not only ‘to grasp something forcefully which one does not have’ (57.235) but also ‘to retain by force what one possesses,’ it is possible to translate PHP 2:6 in two quite different ways. This second interpretation of ἄρπαγμός presumes the position of Jesus prior to the incarnation and hence his willingness to experience the kenosis or ‘emptying’ of his divine prerogatives. In any translation of PHP 2:6 it is important that both possible renderings be clearly indicated, one in the text and the other in the margin.

5.1 · Foods and Condiments · Food

food any kind of food or nourishment¹ Almost all languages have at least a few general terms for food, though these may be derived from verbal expressions meaning essentially ‘that which is eaten.’ In some instances a distinction may be made between ‘that which is chewed’ and ‘that which is drunk,’ and it may therefore be important in certain contexts to speak of food in general by a phrase meaning ‘that which is either chewed or drunk.’ If one fails to include both types of food, the reader might interpret a passage such as MAT 6:11 as requesting only solid foods.

In the place of a general term or phrase such as ‘that which is eaten’ or ‘that which is consumed,’ some languages generalize the meaning of a particular term. For example, in certain parts of the Orient the term meaning specifically ‘rice’ also refers to ‘food’ in general. In fact, some persons will declare, ‘I have not eaten!’ if they have not had rice as part of a meal. A similar type of meaning has developed in English with respect to ‘bread.’ For example, in rendering LUK 4:4 (οὐκ ἐπ’ ἄρτῳ μόνῳ ζήσεται ὁ ἄνθρωπος ‘man shall not live by bread alone’) it would be wrong to employ a strictly literal rendering, since this might mean simply that people should not live on a diet consisting solely of bread. The meaning of LUK 4:4 is, of course, ‘to live means more than merely eating.’

Collocation: ἄρτοι τῆς προθέσεως bread offered to God, consecrated bread (an idiom, literally: bread of the placing forth) bread which was set out as an offering in the presence of God in the Tabernacle and later in the Temple In some languages ἄρτοι τῆς προθέσεως is rendered as ‘bread placed before God’ or ‘bread placed in the presence of God.’

MAT 12:4 · MRK 2:26 · LUK 6:4 · HEB 9:2

23.20 · Physiological Processes and States · Eat, Drink

Collocation: ἄρτον κλάω

to eat a meal, to have a meal (an idiom, literally: to break bread) to eat a meal, without reference to any particular time of the day or to the type of food involved In some languages it is impossible to speak of ‘having a meal’ without indicating the time of day or the nature of the food consumed.

The implication of ‘eating together’ comes from the total context. ἐν δὲ τῇ μιᾷ τῶν σαββάτων συνηγμένων ἡμῶν κλάσαι ἄρτον ‘on the first day of the week we gathered together for a meal’ ACT 20:7. No doubt the reference in ACT 20:7 is to the ‘fellowship meal,’ called ‘agape,’ which constituted the early Christian form of the ‘Lord’s Supper.’ See 23.28.

Collocation: τὸν ἑαυτοῦ ἄρτον ἐσθίω

¹ There are no doubt certain subtle differences of meaning in the various terms listed here as meaning food, but it is impossible to determine such distinctions in meaning from NT contexts. Perhaps τροφή and διατροφή are somewhat more generic in meaning and may suggest a greater emphasis upon nourishment. At the same time, βρώσις[c] and βρώμα[a] may imply solid substantive food, but it is difficult, if not impossible, to argue for such subtle connotative distinctions in meanings which are essentially generic.

power, authority, lordship, ruler, wicked force (title for supernatural forces and powers) a supernatural power having some particular role in controlling the destiny and activities of human beings Some scholars have believed that it is possible to reconstruct at least in part some of the hierarchy represented by these various supernatural forces and powers, on the basis of the neoplatonic system of nine such powers arranged in three orders of three each. NT terminology and usage does not, however, lend itself to such a classification, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to determine what are the significant differences between these supernatural powers and forces.

In the case of EPH 1:21 some scholars apply the terms in question both to the supernatural and to the human sphere, thus emphasizing the totality of Christ’s rule. This has a considerable measure of justification in view of the concepts held by persons in the ancient world, since various earthly powers were supposed to reflect corresponding supernatural powers.

For the most part, translators have endeavored to render the various terms in somewhat different ways, for example, ἐξουσία as ‘authority’; δύναμις as ‘power’; κυριότης as ‘ruler’; and phrases such as τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις as ‘wicked spiritual forces in the heavenly world.’ In a number of languages, however, there are simply not enough terms to designate various kinds of powers, authorities, and forces which could be employed in speaking of such supernatural impersonal powers. Accordingly, some translators have simply used a phrase such as ‘any and all kinds of supernatural powers.’ Where it is possible to make certain lexical distinctions between terms and phrases, this, of course, should be done, but in a number of contexts this may be impossible, and accordingly, some explanation in a marginal note may be required if the reader is to understand satisfactorily the intent of the passages in question.

In some instances a measure of meaning may be obtained by somewhat paraphrastic expressions. For example, Ephesians 2:2 is rendered in some languages as ‘at that time you lived in the way in which the spirit that governs this world dictated you should live. This is the way the one who rules over the power in space commanded you to live. This is the very spirit that now commands the people who disobey God.’

There is no indication that by the time 1 Peter was written ἀρχιποίμην had acquired the conventional meaning of a title designating Christ as one who had principal responsibility for believers. The meaning of ἀρχιποίμην, therefore, is simply ‘chief shepherd,’ but the reference is to Christ in a function which does not involve the literal care of sheep.

LUK 12:58 · ACT 16:19

12.44 · Supernatural Beings and Powers · Supernatural Powers

Collocation: ἄρχων τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ ἄερος

power, authority, lordship, ruler, wicked force (ἄρχων τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ ἄερος - title for supernatural forces and powers) a supernatural power having some particular role in controlling the destiny and activities of human beings Some scholars have believed that it is possible to reconstruct at least in part some of the hierarchy represented by these various supernatural forces and powers, on the basis of the neoplatonic system of nine such powers arranged in three orders of three each. NT terminology and usage does not, however, lend itself to such a classification, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to determine what are the significant differences between these supernatural powers and forces.

In the case of EPH 1:21 some scholars apply the terms in question both to the supernatural and to the human sphere, thus emphasizing the totality of Christ’s rule. This has a considerable measure of justification in view of the concepts held by persons in the ancient world, since various earthly powers were supposed to reflect corresponding supernatural powers.

For the most part, translators have endeavored to render the various terms in somewhat different ways, for example, ἐξουσία as ‘authority’; δύναμις as ‘power’; κυριότης as ‘ruler’; and phrases such as τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις as ‘wicked spiritual forces in the heavenly world.’ In a number of languages, however, there are simply not enough terms to designate various kinds of powers, authorities, and forces which could be employed in speaking of such supernatural impersonal powers. Accordingly, some translators have simply used a phrase such as ‘any and all kinds of supernatural powers.’ Where it is possible to make certain lexical distinctions between terms and phrases, this, of course, should be done, but in a number of contexts this may be impossible, and accordingly, some explanation in a marginal note may be required if the reader is to understand satisfactorily the intent of the passages in question.

1 One may classify ἄρχων τῶν Ἰουδαίων in Domain 11 Groups and Classes of Persons, but the phrase ἄρχων τῶν Ἰουδαίων seems to focus primarily upon the authority and status which such a person has, rather than merely upon his being a member of a deliberative body, as in the case of terms such as συνέδριον[a] city council (11.79), γερουσία and πρεσβυτέριον Sanhedrin (11.83).

illness, disability, weakness the state of being ill and thus incapacitated in some manner It may be extremely difficult in some languages to speak of 'taking illness' or 'carrying away diseases.' A strictly literal rendering of such an expression might suggest immediately that Jesus was a type of medicine man who healed others by taking upon himself precisely the same kinds of diseases (a widespread shamanistic practice). It may therefore be necessary in some languages to translate MAT 8:17 as ‘he caused us to no longer have illness and disease.’ In this way, one may avoid a specific type of shamanistic practice which would be inappropriate in this context.

star, planet a star or a planet Since in JUD 1:13 godless people are likened to ‘wandering stars’ or ‘planets,’ it may be best to introduce this expression by a simile, for example, ‘they are like wandering stars.’ In some languages there is a serious difficulty involved in translating ἀστήρ πλανήτης as ‘planet,’ since the planets or their courses through the heavens are regarded as beneficial. In JUD 1:13 the focal meaning is upon the heretical nature of these godless persons who do not keep on the right course. It may therefore be necessary to translate ἀστέρες πλανήται in JUD 1:13 as ‘stars that do not stay where they should stay’ or ‘... do not remain in their right places.’ See also 15.26.

Collocation: ἀστήρ πρωῒνός morning star, bright star in the morning sky (an idiom, literally: morning star) a planet which is conspicuous in the morning sky (usually either Venus or Mars) In REV 2:28 the singular pronoun αὐτῷ refers to any and all of the persons in Thyatira, and therefore it is usually best rendered as plural. A literal rendering of REV 2:28 may be confusing, since it would suggest that God would be handing over the morning star to persons in Thyatira. A more satisfactory rendering may be ‘I will cause the morning star to shine upon them’ or possibly ‘I will bring light into their hearts.’

to increase, to grow to increase in the degree of a state It would be possible to interpret αὐξάνομαι in 2CO 10:15 as being quantitative, but with an expression of state such as πίστις, intensity of degree seems to be more appropriate. In a number of languages, however, it may be necessary to render this expression in 2CO 10:15 as ‘hoping that you may trust more and more.’

αὖξησις (G0838)

noun, f. | -εως | αὐξάνω

23.188 · Physiological Processes and States · Grow, Growth

to grow, growth to grow, to increase in size, whether of animate beings or of plants In a number of languages one must make a clear distinction in the choice of terms referring to the growth of an animate being (animal or human) and the growth of plants

In COL 2:19 αὖξησις is used figuratively in the sense that the reference of ‘body’ is the church rather than a physical body. Normally a term for ‘growth’ would imply not only size but also number, that is to say, the growth of the church would be in terms of the increase of members of the church, though it might refer to spiritual maturity. In some instances, however, it may be necessary to specify ‘growth in numbers’ so as to avoid the implication which might be derived from the context, namely, that the church is simply a building which gets bigger and bigger.

1 Note the overlap between αὐτός[b] (92.11) and αὐτός[c] (92.37). αὐτός[c] serves essentially as a reference to the third person, both singular and plural, and only in the nominative form does it carry emphasis. This could very well be classified as an instance of αὐτός[c]. In the oblique cases there is no such emphasis. On the other hand, αὐτός[c] may be an adjunct to any lexical item in an oblique case and, as such, carries emphasis.

The emphasis is not upon the hands so much as the activity of the people aboard the ship. Therefore, one may better translate ACT 27:19 as 'they themselves threw the ships tackle overboard.' Obviously, more than the hands were employed in this activity.

40.8 · Reconciliation, Forgiveness · Forgiveness

to pardon, to forgive, forgiveness to remove the guilt resulting from wrongdoing It is extremely important to note that the focus in the meanings of ἀφίημι[f], ἄφεσις[a], and ἀπολύω[e] is upon the guilt of the wrongdoer and not upon the wrongdoing itself. The event of wrongdoing is not undone, but the guilt resulting from such an event is pardoned. To forgive, therefore, means essentially to remove the guilt resulting from wrongdoing.

Some languages make a clear distinction between guilt and sin, and terms for forgiveness are therefore related to guilt and not to the wrongdoing. Therefore, ‘to forgive sins’ is literally ‘to forgive guilt.’ Though terms for ‘forgiveness’ are often literally ‘to wipe out,’ ‘to blot out,’ or ‘to do away with,’ it is obviously not possible to blot out or to wipe out an event, but it is possible to remove or obliterate the guilt.

34.78 · Association · Marriage, Divorce

to divorce, to separate to dissolve the marriage bond Expressions for divorce are often based on terms meaning literally ‘to send away,’ ‘to separate from,’ or ‘to leave one another.’ However, in a number of languages idiomatic expressions are employed, for example ‘to send him off with his clothes,’ ‘to untie the knot between them,’ or ‘to throw away her hearthstones.’ Some persons have attempted to make an important distinction between ἀφίημι in 1CO 7:11 1CO 7:13 and χωρίζω in 1CO 7:15 on the assumption that ἀφίημι implies legal divorce, while χωρίζω only relates to separation. Such a distinction, however, seems to be quite artificial.

1CO 7:11 · 1CO 7:12 · 1CO 7:13

40.8 · Reconciliation, Forgiveness · Forgiveness

to pardon, to forgive, forgiveness to remove the guilt resulting from wrongdoing It is extremely important to note that the focus in the meanings of ἀφίημι[f], ἄφεσις[a], and ἀπολύω[e] is upon the guilt of the wrongdoer and not upon the wrongdoing itself. The event of wrongdoing is not undone, but the guilt resulting from such an event is pardoned. To forgive, therefore, means essentially to remove the guilt resulting from wrongdoing.

Some languages make a clear distinction between guilt and sin, and terms for forgiveness are therefore related to guilt and not to the wrongdoing. Therefore, 'to forgive sins' is literally 'to forgive guilt.' Though terms for 'forgiveness' are often literally 'to wipe out,' 'to blot out,' or 'to do away with,' it is obviously not possible to blot out or to wipe out an event, but it is possible to remove or obliterate the guilt.

1 It is possible that ἀπολύω[a] and ἀφίημι[a] differ somewhat in meaning in that ἀπολύω[a] may suggest more permission and ἀφίημι[a] more dismissal, but this cannot be determined from NT usage. In ACT 15:30, however, οἱ ... ἀπολυθέντες implies clearly being sent (see ἀπολύω[b], 15.66). 2 ἀφίημι[b] involves two principal semantic components: (1) movement away from and (2) resulting separation. It would appear from most contexts that the focal component of ἀφίημι[b] is resulting separation. 3 LUK 4:39 ἀφίημι[j] differs somewhat from the other meanings in this subdomain in that it is not an individual who ceases to be involved in a particular state, but it is the state itself which ceases. At the same time, however, one may interpret this expression in LUK 4:39 semantically as 'she ceased to be in a state of fever.'

1 ROM 16:19 It would be possible to treat ἀφικνέομαι in ROM 16:19 as simply a matter of the movement of information. It would also be possible to handle ἀφικνέομαι in the domain of Communication (33), involving the reception of information or messages. This is a typical instance of semantic overlapping, depending upon the degree to which one wishes to recognize figurative extensions of meaning.

foolish, senseless, unwise pertaining to not employing one’s understanding, particularly in practical matters It is possible that ἄφρων in ROM 2:20 (παιδευτὴν ἄφρόνων ‘instructor of the foolish’) refers to people who are simply uninstructed or ignorant, since ἄφρόνων could be parallel with νηπίων, occurring in the same verse. On the other hand, there appears to be a contrast in the meanings of ἄφρόνων and νηπίων because of the distinctiveness in meanings of παιδευτὴν and διδάσκαλον. Therefore, ἄφρων in ROM 2:20 is better understood as referring to those who act foolishly because they do not use their potential for understanding.

67.119 · Time · Duration of Time with Reference to Some Point of Time: Until, Delay, Still, From until, to, at last, at length the continuous extent of time up to a point¹ The phrase εἰ μὴ ὅταν is often translated as ‘until’ (for example, μηδενὶ ἄ εἶδον διηγῶνται εἰ μὴ ὅταν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναστῇ ‘not to tell anybody what they have seen until the Son of Man has risen from death’ MRK 9:9), but this phrase may be analyzed as meaning ‘if it is not when,’ an expression which is semantically equivalent to ‘until.’

1 ἕως, ἄχρι, and μέχρι frequently occur with a postposed marker of indefinite temporal reference: οὗ, occurring with all three markers, and οὗ with ἕως. 2 It is probable that ἕως[c], ἄχρι[c], and μέχρι[b] differ slightly in meaning, but this cannot be readily determined from existing contexts.

23.98 · Physiological Processes and States · Live, Die

lifeless, inanimate pertaining to a state of not having life In some translations it may seem strange or even meaningless to speak of ‘musical instruments’ as being ‘lifeless’ or ‘not alive,’ since everyone would obviously know such a fact. It may therefore be necessary to translate as ‘even musical instruments like the flute and the harp, which are obviously not alive, nevertheless produce a sound.’
