ζάω (G2198)

verb | impf. ἔζην | ἀναζάω · ἀναζωπυρέω · ζωγρέω · ζωή · ζωογονέω · ζῶον · συζάω · συζωοποιέω

23.88 · Physiological Processes and States · Live, Die to be alive, to live to be in existence, having life, not dead In some figurative expressions ζάω[a] and ζωή may involve serious complications in reference. For example, in JHN 6:51 the expression ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ ἄρτος ὁ ζῶν ‘I am the living bread’ may be understood in some languages as bread which has some living objects in it, namely, bread which is being eaten by worms or weevils. It may therefore be necessary to say ‘I am that bread which gives life.’¹

In a number of languages there is no noun-like word for ‘life.’ It may therefore be necessary to change all passages which speak of ‘life’ into a corresponding expression using a verb-like form meaning ‘to live.’

23.93 · Physiological Processes and States · Live, Die

to come back to life, to live again, to be resurrected, resurrection to come back to life after having once died In a number of languages there is a difficulty involved in formulating some expression for ‘resurrection’ or ‘living again,’ since such a phrase may refer to what is technically known as metempsychosis, that is to say, the rebirth of the soul in another existence, a belief which is widely held in a number of areas of south Asia. This problem may be avoided in some languages by speaking of ‘his body will live again’ or ‘his body will come back to life’ or ‘he will be the same person when he lives again.’

41.2 · Behavior and Related States · Behavior, Conduct to live, to conduct oneself, to behave to conduct oneself, with the particular manner specified by the context In 2TI 3:12 ζάω does not refer to physiological existence, but rather to the manner in which a person behaves or conducts himself in relationship to other persons and to God.

ζεστός

ζεστός (G2200)

adjc. | -ή, -όν | ζέω

79.71 · Features of Objects · Hot, Lukewarm, Cold hot pertaining to being hot, often associated with boiling In REV 3:15 the usage is figurative; ζεστός in the sense of a favorable attitude towards something seems not to have been a conventionalized meaning.

In a number of languages the contrast between ‘hot’ and ‘cold’ may refer primarily to sex or anger, in which case the contrast is certainly not appropriate for REV 3:15. It may therefore be necessary in many instances to use an equivalent such as ‘for or against’ or ‘friendly to or hostile toward.’

11.88 · Groups and Classes of Persons and Members of Such Groups and Classes · Socio-Political zealot, nationalist a member of a Jewish nationalistic group seeking independence from Rome It is possible that ζηλωτής in LUK 6:15 and Καναναῖος in MAT 10:4 function not so much as a designation of an individual belonging to the particular Jewish nationalistic party (according to some scholars such a party may not have been organized at that time), but of one who is simply zealous for national independence (see ζηλωτής[a] 'enthusiast, zealous person,' 25.77). Therefore, one might speak of Simon as 'Simon the patriot' (the same applies to ACT 1:13, the only other occurrence of ζηλωτής[b] in the NT). To render ζηλωτής[b] as 'armed insurrectionist' or 'guerilla fighter' (as some translators have suggested) would be reading into the text more than is specifically warranted.

88.237 · Moral and Ethical Qualities and Related Behavior · Hypocrisy, Pretense hypocrisy, pretense (a figurative extension of meaning of ζύμη[a] ‘yeast,’ 5.11) hypocritical behavior, probably implying hidden attitudes and motivations In MAT 16:6 the ζύμη of the Pharisees and the Sadducees is equated with their teaching, but the context would indicate clearly that this was a type of hypocritical teaching, since the religious leaders said one thing but did something quite different.

In 1CO 5:6 1CO 5:7 there is an extended figurative reference to ζύμη. At first, ζύμη must be understood in the literal sense (as in Domain 5), yet ζύμη in verse 7 refers to wrong behavior. It is important, however, to try to preserve the continuity of the figurative reference, and for that reason the phrase παλαιὰ ζύμη is sometimes translated as ‘the old yeast of sin.’ It is difficult to know to what extent there may be a reference at this point to the hypocrisy which accompanies legalistic behavior.

37.1 · Control, Rule · Control, Restrain to control, to bring under control, to hold in check to bring under control and to continue to restrain In many languages it may be difficult to speak of 'bringing a person under control.' It may therefore be more appropriate to use some such phrase as 'not allow a person to do just what he wants' or 'make a person behave' or 'make a person obey.' In speaking of animals, one may render JAS 3:7 as 'all kinds of wild animals ... can be made to obey a person.'

ζωή

ζωή

ζωή (G2222)

noun, f. | -ῆς | ζάω

life the condition of being alive and well because of the presence of air to breathe and food to eat; in many cases its usage implies health, strength, and some degree of prosperity In some figurative expressions ζάω[a] and ζωή may involve serious complications in reference. For example, in JHN 6:51 the expression ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ ἄρτος ὁ ζῶν 'I am the living bread' may be understood in some languages as bread which has some living objects in it, namely, bread which is being eaten by worms or weevils. It may therefore be necessary to say 'I am that bread which gives life.'¹

In MRK 10:30, καὶ ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τῷ ἐρχομένῳ ζώην αἰώνιον 'and in the age to come (he will receive) eternal life,' there are significant differences of opinion as to whether the emphasis is primarily upon duration or upon the quality of life which is to be characteristic of the coming age. Since in some languages life can only be spoken of as a verb meaning literally 'to live,' then 'eternal life' might be expressed merely as 'living without dying,' but this can be misunderstood to mean that Christians will never die physically. Some translators have thus spoken of 'eternal life' as being 'real life that never ends.' In this way a qualitative distinction is introduced so that readers will not think merely in terms of the prolongation of earthly life, something which in some parts of the world would be regarded as being a terrible punishment rather than a blessing. In a number of languages there is no noun-like word for 'life.' It may therefore be necessary to change all passages which speak of 'life' into a corresponding expression using a verb-like form meaning 'to live.'

4.2 · Animals · Animals

living creature, animal any living creature, whether wild or domesticated (in contrast with plants) In a number of languages the equivalent of 'living things' or 'living creatures' is simply 'those which are alive' or 'those that move about.' ζῷον[a], therefore, includes essentially quadrupeds, fish, birds, and insects, and is not used in the NT to designate human beings. In several passages in the book of Revelation, ζῷον[b] 'a living being' (12.32) is employed to refer to supernatural beings at God's throne (note REV 4:6-REV 4:9 which in many ways is similar to the description of 'living creatures' in EZE 1:5f).
