verb | μαθητής · μαθήτρια · συμμαθητής

36.31 · Guide, Discipline, Follow · Follow, Be a Disciple

to follow, to be a disciple of to be a follower or a disciple of someone, in the sense of adhering to the teachings or instructions of a leader and in promoting the cause of such a leader Though many translators have attempted to employ the metaphorical significance of ‘to follow’ in the sense of ‘to be a disciple of,’ there are certain dangers in a number of languages. For example,

‘to follow’ may often have the connotation of ‘to pursue after with evil intent.’ In many languages the appropriate equivalent of ‘to follow’ (in the sense of ‘to be a disciple’) is literally ‘to accompany’ or ‘to go along with’ or ‘to be in the group of.’

MAT 13:52 · MAT 27:57

36.37 · Guide, Discipline, Follow · Follow, Be a Disciple

to make disciples, to cause people to become followers to cause someone to become a disciple or follower of In rendering μαθητεύω in MAT 28:19 and similar contexts, it is important to avoid the implication of duress or force, that is to say, one should not translate ‘force them to be my disciples’ or ‘compel them to be my disciples.’ This might very well be implied in a literal translation of a causative such as ‘to make.’ In order to avoid a wrong implication of a causative, it may be important to use some such expression as ‘convince them to become my disciples’ or ‘urge them to be my disciples.’

μαθητής

μαθητής (G3101)

noun, m. | -οῦ | μαθητεύω

disciple, follower (derivative of μαθητεύω[a] ‘to follow, to be a disciple of; 36.31) a person who is a disciple or follower of someone Though in the NT μαθητής generally refers to men, it is neutral as to sex distinction, and thus in a few instances in the NT also includes women (as in ACT 6:1, πληθυνόντων τῶν μαθητῶν ‘the number of disciples kept growing’). In some languages it may be important to indicate clearly the sex distinction, and in those contexts in which the twelve disciples are being referred to, obviously the reference must be to men. However, when the wider group of disciples is referred to, then some indication should be introduced as to the fact that both men and women were involved.

One must, however, be very careful about the transliteration of this term, since it may correspond to an indigenous expression having quite a different meaning. Although in the OT it may be useful to have a marginal note explaining the play on words involved in the derivation of this term, in the NT one can usually use an expression such as 'food called manna.'

martyr a person who has been deprived of life as the result of bearing witness to his beliefs A strictly literal translation of the Greek expression in REV 17:6 (ἐκ τοῦ αἵματος τῶν μαρτύρων Ἰησοῦ ‘of the blood of the martyrs of Jesus’) is likely to result in considerable misunderstanding, for it could mean that these were individuals who had been martyred by Jesus rather than those who had been deprived of their lives because of their relationship to Jesus. It would be possible to render τῶν μαρτύρων Ἰησοῦ as ‘those who had been killed because they belonged to Jesus,’ but one should avoid any expression which would suggest slave ownership.

breast the breast of both humans and animals, with special reference to the mammary glands In REV 1:13 the phrase πρὸς τοῖς μαστοῖς is a reference to the particular location of the gold band which went around the chest and not to the mammary glands as such. In some languages, therefore, it is often preferable to use a phrase such as ‘around his chest’ rather than trying to be more specific, for example, ‘a gold band around his chest at the location of his breasts.’

In translating LUK 11:27 it is important to use an expression which will be perfectly natural, for example, ‘the breasts that gave you milk’ or ‘the breasts from which you obtained milk.’ In some instances, however, a specific reference to breasts as the source of milk may seem somewhat vulgar, and therefore it may be better to speak of ‘happy is your mother who nursed you.’

In the comparative forms, however, it seems difficult to substantiate this type of distinction.

honey a sweet substance produced by bees from flower nectar Though honey may be regarded by some as a vegetable product, since flowers constitute its source, it is more specifically associated with bees and in some languages is actually called bee urine.

μέλι ἄγριον, literally ‘wild honey,’ refers to bee honey gathered in the fields and not the result of keeping bees in hives.

In the ancient world bee keeping was a highly developed industry, since honey was a principal source of sweetening. The equivalent of wild honey in a number of languages is ‘forest honey’ or ‘tree honey.’

71.36 · Mode · Necessary, Unnecessary

must be, has to be to be inevitable, with respect to future developments In a number of languages there is a problem involved in speaking of what is necessary or inevitable in the future, for a distinction is made between that which is purely impersonal or physical and that which is the result of some person's purpose, intent, or activity. As in the case of δεῖ in MRK 13:7 \(71.34\), it is impossible in the case of μέλλω in MAT 17:12 to determine whether the reference is merely to an inevitable future event ('bound to happen') or whether this is part of the plan and purpose of God. μέλος

μέλος

μέλος (G3196)

noun, n. | -ους

8.9 · Body, Body Parts, and Body Products · Parts of the Body

body part, member a part of the body¹ In some languages an equivalent of μέλος is simply 'division,' and in a few languages an even more generic expression such as 'things' is used, so that 'the parts of the body' may be rendered by an expression meaning literally 'things of the body.'

In different languages the various parts of the body are classified in a number of diverse ways. In some languages the sensory organs of seeing, hearing, smelling, and tasting (those related to the head) are often set off from other types of organs, while in other languages special terms may be employed for those organs involving movement, for example, the joints, arms, legs, etc. Other languages make extensive subclassifications of body parts on the basis of whether they are external or internal, though such classifications often appear to be arbitrary, since teeth and tongue may be regarded as either external or internal.

1 One may also classify the meaning of μέλος in Domain 63 Whole, Unite, Part, Divide and consider its reference to body parts as only an instance of an even more generic meaning, namely, part (63.17). On the other hand, its frequent association with the body in absolute contexts may justify its classification here as a generic for body parts.

11.8 · Groups and Classes of Persons and Members of Such Groups and Classes · General party, group a group of people having specific membership and forming a part of a larger constituency In the NT μέρος[d] occurs only in the expression μέρος τῶν Φαρισαίων the party of the Pharisees, and though the Pharisees constituted a socio-religious group, the use of μέρος[d] does not focus upon this socio-religious aspect of the Pharisees relationship to the Jewish nation as a whole, but merely upon their identity as a part of a larger constituency. The expression the party of the Pharisees may be rendered in some languages as the group to which the Pharisees belonged or those who were counted as Pharisees or the division called Pharisees. In selecting a word for party or group, it is important to avoid a term which would be essentially political in meaning. If there is no general term for party, it may be necessary to use one with a socio-religious denotation, since that would be the most accurate way of identifying the Pharisees in their relationship to other distinctive groups in the Jewish nation.

1 The overlapping features of meaning in γῆ[d], χώρα[b], κλίμα, ὄριον, and μέρος[c] may be readily illustrated by the comparable overlapping of English terms such as region, territory, and land. For example, in the case of MAT 15:21 it would be possible to speak of the region of Tyre and Sidon, the territory of Tyre and Sidon, the land of Tyre and Sidon, and even the district of Tyre and Sidon. The English terms region, territory, land, and district do differ in certain nuances of meaning reflecting primarily supplementary components which are largely connotative. 2 μέρος[f] is incorporated at this point in Subdomain D Completely, Enough in Domain 78 Degree, since it serves as a semantic opposite to the meanings involved in πᾶς[c] (78.44), τέλος[d] (78.47), and ὅλος[c] (78.44).

1 There are no doubt certain subtle distinctions in the meanings of the terms in 83.9 (μέσος[a], ἀνά μέσον, ἐντός[a], ἐν[b], μετά[h], εἰς[e], ἐπί[c], πρὸς[d], παρὰ[b]). For example, πρὸς[d] may suggest some kind of interaction or response and παρὰ[b] may focus upon association, but it is difficult, if not impossible, on the basis of existing contexts to define precisely the differences in meaning. 2 1TH 2:7 One can perhaps best interpret the relationship between ἐν and μέσῳ in the phrase ἐν μέσῳ in 1TH 2:7 as one of redundant reinforcing, since ἐν can also be understood in the sense of ‘among,’ ‘with.’ 3 In some contexts the meanings of μέσος[a] (83.9) and μέσος[b] (83.10) may be said to overlap, or the situation may be such as to provide two different interpretations. For example, in MAT 10:16 ‘sheep in the midst of wolves’ may mean that the sheep are completely surrounded by wolves or that the wolves intermingle with the sheep.

Christ, Messiah (literally: one who has been anointed) in the NT, titles for Jesus as the Messiah, but in many contexts, and especially without an article, Χριστός becomes a part of the name of Jesus; see 93.387) In a number of languages Χριστός (or Μεσσίας) as a reference to the Messiah occurs in a transliterated form based either on Χριστός in Greek or on Messiah in Hebrew. However, in some languages an attempt is made to represent the significance of the terms Χριστός and Μεσσίας by translating ‘God’s appointed one’ or ‘God’s specially chosen one’ or ‘the expected one,’ in the sense of one to whom everyone was looking for help and deliverance.

1 The semantic domains of σύν[a] (89.107) and μετά[a] (89.108) overlap considerably, for in a number of instances essentially the same referential relationship can be expressed either by σύν[a] or by μετά[a]. However, in contexts involving hostility and combat, opposing forces may be spoken of as fighting against one another with μετά[a]. In this type of context the preposition σύν[a] would not be appropriate, since it would suggest those fighting on the same side, not on opposite sides of the conflict. 2 Attendant circumstances are often expressed in English by participial or gerund phrases. 3 2JN 1:3 In 2JN 1:3 χάρις, ἔλεος, and εἰρήνη refer to the events which are experienced by ἡμῶν. 4 There are no doubt certain subtle distinctions in the meanings of the terms in 83.9 (μέσος[a], ἀνά μέσον, ἐντός[a], ἐν[b], μετά[h], εἰς[e], ἐπί[c], πρὸς[d], παρὰ[b]). For example, πρὸς[d] may suggest some kind of interaction or response and παρὰ[b] may focus upon association, but it is difficult, if not impossible, on the basis of existing contexts to define precisely the differences in meaning. 5 NEW NOTE en

1 There are no doubt certain subtle distinctions of meaning in this series of related expressions in 90.63 (ἀπολαμβάνω[e], ἐπιλαμβάνομαι[f], λαμβάνω[h], μεταλαμβάνω[b]), but it is difficult to determine the precise distinctions on the basis of existing contexts. As in the case of a number of verbs which mark an experiencer relation, an equivalent translation consists simply of a passive form of a verb related to the noun complement. For example, in the case of JHN 7:23, one might very well translate 'if a person is circumcised on the Sabbath.'

1 It is possible to interpret μετέχω[b] as simply an instance of μετέχω[a] to have a share in or to partake of (57.6), and in HEB 5:13 μετέχων could be interpreted in this sense. In 1CO 10:30, however, μετέχω may be interpreted as being used in an absolute sense and thus meaning to partake of food. But it is also possible that even in 1CO 10:30 one should recognize the ellipsis of an expression for food which could be supplied from the wider context. Note that προσλαμβάνομαι occurs with specific terms for food in ACT 27:36, but in such contexts there is no need to assign a meaning to this verb other than the more general meaning of to take hold of (see 18.2). 2 It is not possible to determine on the basis of existing evidence whether the expression τραπέζης μετέχω is a genuine idiom or a phrase which is to be taken in a literal sense as referring to the ordinance of Holy Communion in contrast to banqueting in heathen temples.

to do something secretly, to do something without letting the public know (an idiom, probably an adage or traditional saying, literally: do not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing) an admonition to do something without letting people know about it It is rare that one can preserve this idiom, since in its literal form it may seem absurd. For many English-speaking people the meaning has already been twisted by common usage to mean ‘be sure to not let anyone know if you are performing something that is shady or illegal.’ Today’s English Version attempts to represent something of the impact of this idiom by translating “do it in such a way that even your closest friend will not know about it.”

1 οὐ[a] and μή[a] are lexically equivalent in meaning, but they have a syntactic distribution which may be said to give them certain distinctions in so-called class meaning. However, since these differences are based upon syntactic distributions, such distinctions in meaning are beyond the scope of this type of lexical analysis. The form οὐ, of course, tends to occur primarily in indicative clauses, while μή occurs generally in non-indicative clauses. 2 LUK 22:35 A question such as μή τινος ὑστερήσατε; (LUK 22:35) actually suggests agreement with the equivalent of a negative statement, ‘you did not lack anything.’ It is for this reason that in some languages the response to this type of question is with a positive particle meaning ‘yes.’

no one, none, nothing a negative reference to an entity, event, or state Though in English one may readily say ‘tell no one’ or ‘take nothing,’ in a number of languages the negation must be related to the verb and not to a pronominal object. Accordingly, it may be necessary to translate as ‘do not tell anyone’ or ‘do not take anything.’

adjc. | -οῦ | μισθόομαι

57.174 · Possess, Transfer, Exchange · Hire, Rent Out

hired worker, hired person (derivative of μισθόομαι ‘to hire,’ 57.172) a person who has been hired to perform a particular service or work¹

MRK 1:20 · JHN 10:12 · JHN 10:13

1 μίσθιος and μισθωτός involve two sets of components, one focusing upon the work which such a person does and the other upon the fact that the individual in question is paid. This means that μίσθιος and μισθωτός could justifiably be classified either in Domain 42 Perform, Do or in Domain 57.

to recall, to remember to recall or be aware of information, and as a result to respond in an appropriate manner (for example, punishing, helping, honoring, etc., depending upon the context) μνημονεύω in REV 18:5 implies much more than God's mental state in remembering the crimes of Babylon. The reference is clearly to God's both remembering and punishing. Similarly, in GAL 2:10 μνημονεύω refers to more than mere mental awareness of those in need, for the process of recall involves doing something about the needy (compare 29.7). In a number of languages it may be necessary to make this implication quite specific, for example, 'all they asked was that we should be concerned for the needy of their group.'

μοιχάω (G3429) — μοιχάομαι

verb | μοιχαλίζ · μοιχεία · μοιχεύω · μοιχός

88.276 · Moral and Ethical Qualities and Related Behavior · Sexual Misbehavior

to commit adultery, adultery sexual intercourse of a man with a married woman other than his own spouse From the standpoint of the NT, adultery was normally defined in terms of the married status of the woman involved in any such act. In other words, sexual intercourse of a married man with an unmarried woman would usually be regarded as πορνεία 'fornication' (88.271), but sexual intercourse of either an unmarried or a married man with someone else's wife was regarded as adultery, both on the part of the man as well as the woman. In view of the married status of the woman being the determining factor in μοιχάω, μοιχεύω, μοιχάομαι, μοιχεία, and related terms (88.277-88.278), there is a significant contrast with πορνεύω and related expressions (88.271). πορνεύω, however, may be regarded as more generic in meaning, and thus in certain contexts including adultery.

MAT 5:32 is usually rendered as 'anyone who divorces his wife for any cause other than fornication makes her guilty of committing adultery,' presumably on the implication that she would marry someone else, as is implied in the final clause of the verse.

In languages spoken by cattle-raising people, the major difficulty is in finding a satisfactory generic expression, since the tendency is to be very specific in matters of age, sex, color, size, etc. Under such circumstances one can only select terms with more or less generic meanings or employ more specific expressions which seem to fit particular contexts.

Similarly, the expression ‘to where joints and marrow come together’ seems rather anomalous, since the joints bring together various bones, but they are not joined together with marrow. This passage in HEB 4:12 is essentially figurative in that it is speaking of the word of God being sharper than a two-edged sword cutting all the way through to where soul and spirit meet, and this is described as being parallel to where joints and marrow come together. Perhaps one can best state this in some languages as ‘to where the joints and the marrow are,’ thus suggesting that part of the human body farthest from the surface.

mill a construction of two flat stones between which grain was ground into flour by rotating the top stone Some mills were relatively small and operated by hand and could well be considered as artifacts. Others, however, were quite large, and animals were used to rotate the upper stone.

In almost all parts of the world grain is ground in one way or another. Quite frequently mills are of the same general structure as those used in ancient times, in which two relatively large, round, flat stones were placed one on top of the other, and the grain was ground between the two stones. Grain entered the mill through a round hole in the upper stone, and the flour gradually emerged from around the edges of the two stones. In other parts of the world, however, grain is prepared by means of grinding stones called metates. In still other parts of the world, a mortar and pestle are used for the grinding or preparation of grain. In most contexts, what is important is either the large size of the stones or the function of grinding grain, not necessarily the particular form. However, in contexts which speak about tying a millstone to a man's neck (see 7.69) and his being thrown into the depths of the sea, it is important to refer to relatively large stones which would cause a person to sink immediately. In such a context the use of a term for 'mortar,' especially one of wood, would hardly be appropriate since it would normally float. Frequently μύλος may be rendered as 'stones for grinding grain.' In other instances, even a more generic expression may be used, for example, 'a large stone.'
