temple, sanctuary a building in which a deity is worshiped (in the case of the Temple in Jerusalem, a place where God was also regarded as dwelling) ναός[a] may often be rendered as ‘the house of God’ or ‘the place where God dwells’ or ‘God’s building.’ In some languages it is most naturally referred to as ‘the holy house’ or ‘the holy place.’ See also 7.16.

ναός is used figuratively in JHN 2:21 (ἐκεῖνος δὲ ἔλεγεν περὶ τοῦ ναοῦ τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ ‘but he spoke of the temple of his body’ or ‘... of his body as a temple’) and in 1CO 6:19, where the believer’s body is spoken of as ναός τοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν ἁγίου πνεύματος ‘the temple of the Holy Spirit within you.’

replica temple, model of a shrine a small replica or model of a temple or shrine¹ In ACT 19:24 the term ναός refers only to a small replica of the temple of Artemis. An equivalent of ναός[b] in ACT 19:24 is in some languages ‘tiny temples of Artemis,’ or, in other instances, it is ‘souvenir temples of Artemis.’

ACT 19:24

¹ It would be possible to define ναός[a] temple, sanctuary (7.15) in such a way as to include both sanctuaries as well as replicas of such buildings, but in view of the widespread diminutive derivations in Greek and the clear distinctions which many languages make between originals and souvenir replicas, there seem to be both theoretical as well as practical reasons for this distinction between ναός[a] and ναός[b].

young man a young man beyond the age of puberty, but normally before marriage The person referred to as a νεανίας in ACT 20:9 is called a παῖς ‘boy’ (see 9.41) in ACT 20:12. This should not be understood as identity in meaning, since the person concerned could have been of such an age that either ‘young man’ or ‘boy’ was a possible denotation. In other words, the age reference of νεανίας and παῖς overlaps in Greek. In a number of languages, however, there is a much more specific and clear-cut distinction in age grading.

¹ In certain instances, particularly in the case of θανατόω[b] and νεκρόω, it is difficult to determine whether the figurative meanings involved have become conventionalized or whether they represent what may be called figurative usage, in other words, new figures of speech which no doubt had become somewhat conventional for the Christian community.

νέκρωσις

νέκρωσις (G3500)

noun, f. | -εως | νεκρόω

23.99 · Physiological Processes and States · Live, Die to die, death the process of dying In a number of languages clear distinctions are made in the use of terms for dying on the basis of the manner or circumstances of death. For example, one term may refer to death primarily as the result of old age, while another term may refer to death caused by sickness, and still other terms may be used for death caused by violence. Careful distinctions must be used in determining the choice of terms based on particular contexts.

This first clause of 2CO 4:10 is highly elliptical, for it evidently refers to the fact that Paul was constantly in danger of dying in the same manner in which Jesus died, that is to say, by violence. One may render 2CO 4:10 as ‘at all times we live in the constant threat of being killed as Jesus was.’

to gesture, to motion, to nod, to beckon to signal to someone by means of part of the body, especially by means of the head or hands¹ In a number of languages it is necessary to be quite specific with regard to types of gestures or motions of the head or hands and arms. For example, in JHN 13:24 there is an obvious question involved, and this may require in some languages a particular signal by means of the hands or face. The same would be true in the case of LUK 1:62. In LUK 1:22 the gesture would have to be something which would explain or indicate Zechariah's inability to speak, while in LUK 5:7 quite another gesture would no doubt be called for, since the persons involved were at quite a distance from one another.

noun, n. | -ους | νεφέλη

11.3 · Groups and Classes of Persons and Members of Such Groups and Classes · General large crowd (a figurative extension of meaning of νέφος 'cloud,' not occurring in the NT) a large crowd of people In HEB 12:1 a possible supplementary component of 'heavenly' is applicable, since the reference is to the heroes of faith mentioned in chapter 11. In general one cannot preserve the figure of speech, nor even a term meaning 'crowd,' since the persons in chapter 11 did not form a crowd historically. A more common equivalent of 'large crowd of witnesses' is 'many, many witnesses.'

νεφρός (G3510)

noun, m. | -οῦ

26.11 · Psychological Faculties

heart, feelings, desires (figurative extension of meaning of νεφρός ‘kidney,’ not occurring in its literal meaning in the NT) the psychological faculty of desire, intent, and feeling¹ Though some persons have attempted to distinguish between σπλάγχνον[b], κοιλία[c], and νεφρός, it is extremely doubtful whether this is really possible or practical. The semantic focus in the use of these terms is clearly the deeper and more intimate feelings and emotions. In some languages one can use a term which literally means ‘belly’ or ‘bowels,’ but more often than not, these emotions are associated with some particular organ of the body such as heart, spleen, liver, etc. Rather, however, than attempting to employ a figurative expression which may or may not be fully equivalent, it is often preferable to refer to the emotional content by using terms such as ‘feelings,’ ‘intent,’ ‘desires,’ or ‘compassion,’ depending upon the context.

REV 2:23

1 It would be possible to treat σπλάγχνα[b], κοιλία[c], and νεφρός in this figurative sense in Domain 25 Attitudes and Emotions, but these meanings have been assigned to this domain of Psychological Faculties since the meanings involve aspects of personality which function as agents or presumed locations of psychological dispositions.

1 The meanings of terms in 67.152-67.158 could almost be treated equally well in Domain 23 Physiological Processes and States, since these could be regarded as simply derivatives of physiological states. However, the focus of meaning in the respective contexts seems to be more upon a particular period of time rather than upon a physiological state or condition.

νόμος (G3551)

33.333 · Communication · Law, Regulation, Ordinance

law, ordinance, rule a formalized rule (or set of rules) prescribing what people must do The difference between ‘a law’ and ‘a command’ is that a law is enforced by sanctions from a society, while a command carries only the sanctions of the individual who commands. When, however, the people of Israel accepted the commands of God as the rules which they would follow and enforce, these became their laws.

The occurrence of νόμος two times in ROM 8:2 poses certain problems of both translation and interpretation: ὁ γὰρ νόμος τοῦ πνεύματος τῆς ζωῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ ἠλευθέρωσέν σε ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου τῆς ἀμαρτίας καὶ τοῦ θανάτου ‘for the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus freed you from the law which leads to sin and death.’ In the second occurrence of νόμος, the meaning is clearly the rules and regulations of the OT law, but in the case of the first occurrence of νόμος, there is no such formulation of decrees. The reference in this instance must therefore be to certain basic principles. If, however, one understands νόμος in the sense of a type of abstract ‘governing power,’ it is possible that the reference in the phrase νόμος τοῦ πνεύματος τῆς ζωῆς is to this governing power of the Spirit of life which frees one from the law which stipulates sin and death.

the Law the first five books of the OT called the Torah (often better rendered as ‘instruction’) In a number of languages it is not possible to use a singular expression such as ‘the Law,’ for since the Torah consisted of five books and included a number of regulations and instructions, it is necessary in many languages to use ‘the laws.’ Furthermore, to distinguish this body of laws from common, ordinary customs or legal regulations, it may be necessary to employ a phrase such as ‘the laws given to Moses’ or simply ‘the laws of Moses.’

marriage law (an idiom, literally: law of the man, or: law of the husband) the law which binds a woman to a man in marriage It may be especially difficult in some languages to speak of ‘being free from the marriage law.’ An appropriate equivalent in some languages may be ‘she is no longer obliged to remain the wife of the dead man,’ but in other languages it is more meaningful to say ‘she is then permitted to marry another man.’

82.4 · Spacial Orientations · North, South, East, West

south In most languages east and west are related to the rising or setting sun, although in some languages there may be some local geographical feature which serves as a marker of direction, for example, the location of a particular mountain, the ocean, or a river. For north, some languages employ 'to the left of the rising sun,' that is to say, the direction is oriented in terms of the left hand of a person facing toward the rising sun. Similarly, south would be 'to the right of the rising sun.'

MAT 12:42 · LUK 11:31 · LUK 13:29 · REV 21:13

14.8 · Physical Events and States · Wind

south wind a wind which blows from the south A number of languages have terms for winds coming from or going toward different directions. In a number of cases, however, directional expressions are not included in the terms for such winds. For example, a north wind may be simply called ‘a cold wind,’ and a south wind might be called ‘a wind from the sea.’ Such expressions depend upon local geographical features. Even in the instance in which a south wind is described in terms of direction, it may be necessary to use a somewhat expanded phrase, for example, ‘a wind from the right of the rising sun.’ Such an expression is based upon the experience of a person facing the rising sun and determining the south in terms of the right side of the person.

67.93 · Time · Duration of Time without Reference to Points or Units of Time: Time, Spend Time, Always, Eternal, Old, Immediately, Young a long time (ἡμέρας τεσσαράκοντα καὶ νύκτας τεσσαράκοντα - literally, forty days and forty nights) possibly a symbolic temporal expression denoting a relatively long period of time Most translations render ἡμέρας τεσσαράκοντα καὶ νύκτας τεσσαράκοντα as either ‘forty days and forty nights’ or ‘forty days,’ though it is possible, in view of the symbolic meaning of the number ‘forty,’ that this expression is to be understood as meaning a long period of time.
