milk white fluid secreted by women and female mammals for nourishment of their young; also used as food for humans The term γάλα may refer to any type of milk, whether produced by humans or by certain domesticated animals, for example, cow, sheep, goat, camel.

In a number of languages two distinct terms are used for milk, one identifying the human milk and another term specifying milk from animals. In the context of 1CO 3:2 it is probably the latter reference which is important, though the passage is highly figurative and the emphasis is upon food for babies.¹

glutton (a figurative extension of meaning of γαστήρ[a] ‘belly,’ 8.68) a person who habitually eats excessively A glutton is often spoken of idiomatically, for example, ‘a large belly’ or ‘a person who is only a stomach’ or ‘a professional eater.’

pregnant, to be pregnant (an idiom, literally: to have in the womb) to be in a state of pregnancy This expression contrasts with the meaning of συλλαμβάνω[b], 23.49, in that it seems to focus more upon the state of pregnancy rather than the event of conception.

It is impossible to determine whether in MAT 1:23 (ἐν γαστρὶ ἔξει καὶ τέξεται υἱόν ‘she will be pregnant and bear a son’) the focus is upon the state of pregnancy or the fact of conception (see 23.49).

Gehenna, hell a place of punishment for the dead The Greek term γέννα is derived from a Hebrew phrase meaning ‘Valley of Hinnom,’ a ravine running along the south side of Jerusalem and a place where the rubbish from the city was constantly being burned. According to late Jewish popular belief, the last judgment was to take place in this valley, and hence the figurative extension of meaning from ‘Valley of Hinnom’ to ‘hell.’ In most languages γέννα is rendered as ‘place of punishment’ or ‘place where the dead suffer’ or ‘place where the dead suffer because of their sins.’

It may, therefore, be better to translate MAT 1:18 as ‘this is what happened when Jesus Christ was born’ or ‘these things happened at the time of Jesus Christ’s birth.’

10.24 · Kinship Terms · Kinship Relations Involving Successive Generations

lineage, family line persons of successive generations who are related by birth In biblical times the reckoning of a lineage was somewhat complex in view of certain distinctions between legal and biological relations. The focus of meaning in γένεσις[b], οἶκος[c], and πατριά[a] is not, however, the list of ancestors, but the lineage of successively related persons to which the reference person belongs. Some scholars, however, interpret γένεσις in MAT 1:1 as being part of what is essentially a title for the book of Matthew and thus would render the introductory phrase as ‘the book of the history of Jesus Christ’ (see γένεσις[c] ‘history,’ 33.19).

In some languages a successive series of ancestors is called ‘the forefathers’ or ‘those to whom one looks back’ or ‘those who have gone ahead.’ In other languages a lineage is referred to as ‘a person’s root’ or ‘a man’s trunk’ (referring to the trunk of a tree).

history an account of the origin and life of someone For the most part, scholars understand the phrase βίβλος γενέσεως in MAT 1:1 as referring to the list of ancestors which immediately follows. to bear, to give birth to give birth to a child¹ All languages have expressions for human birth, though these are frequently in idiomatic forms, for example, ‘to drop a child’ or ‘to cause a baby to pass between the legs.’ A number of languages have a variety of terms referring to giving birth, and some of these may involve unfortunate connotations. One must therefore be careful about the selection of appropriate expressions.

γεννάω also occurs together with ἐξ αἱμάτων (JHN 1:13) and ἐκ τῆς σαρκός (JHN 3:6) in reference to physical birth. In JHN 3:5, γεννηθῆ ἐξ ὕδατος has likewise been interpreted by some scholars as referring to physical birth (compare JHN 3:6), but others understand this as referring to baptism. Certainly the occurrence of γεννηθῆ with πνεύματος in JHN 3:5 is a reference to religious rebirth, in which case γεννάω would involve a radical change of state (see 13.56). The use of the same word with two different meanings or referents is typical of the style of the Gospel of John.

1.60 · Geographical Objects and Features · Land in Contrast With the Sea

land dry land, in contrast with the sea In a number of languages a clear distinction is made between terms which designate land in contrast with water and those which designate cultivated land. Even in English the normal term for land close to water is ‘shore’ or ‘coast,’ and therefore one may translate MAT 14:24 as ‘the boat was already far away from the shore.’ Similarly, in ACT 27:27 one may translate ‘we were getting close to shore.’

1.3 · Geographical Objects and Features · Universe, Creation

Collocation: ὁ οὐρανὸς καὶ ἡ γῆ

heaven and earth, universe a more or less fixed phrase: the heavens and the earth, equivalent to a single lexical item: the totality of God’s creation There may be certain complications involved in rendering ὁ οὐρανὸς καὶ ἡ γῆ as ‘heaven and earth,’ since ‘heaven’ might be interpreted in some languages as referring only to the dwelling place of God himself. The referents in this passage are ‘the sky and the earth,’ in other words, all of physical existence, but not the dwelling place of God, for the latter would not be included in what is destined to pass away.

1 The occurrences of γῆ[a], οἰκουμένη[a], and κόσμος[b] relate specifically to the known inhabited areas of the earth, which in the NT period included the countries bordering on the Mediterranean, the Fertile Crescent as far as the Indus Valley, and as far north in Europe as England and Scandinavia. This was the total known earth or world. Such a restriction to a known area of the earth is also true of terms used in some receptor languages, though the referents are obviously different. What is important is not the particular area of the earth, but the corresponding concept of the surface of the earth as the place of human habitation. It is possible that οἰκουμένη[a] differs slightly in meaning from γῆ[a] and κόσμος[b] in view of a somewhat greater emphasis or focus upon the civilized part of earth. 2 Although in the NT γῆ does not occur as a reference to all solid substances in contrast with fire, air, and water, it does so occur in Classical and Hellenistic Greek. This generic meaning of γῆ as an element is thus not part of the lexical inventory of the NT, but γῆ[b], a designation for soil, ground, does occur. 3 The overlapping features of meaning in γῆ[d], χώρα[b], κλίμα, ὄριον, and μέρος[c] may be readily illustrated by the comparable overlapping of English terms such as region, territory, and land. For example, in the case of MAT 15:21 it would be possible to speak of the region of Tyre and Sidon, the territory of Tyre and Sidon, the land of Tyre and Sidon, and even the district of Tyre and Sidon. The English terms region, territory, land, and district do differ in certain nuances of meaning reflecting primarily supplementary components which are largely connotative.

1 The meanings of terms in 67.152-67.158 could almost be treated equally well in Physiological Processes and States (Domain 23), since these could be regarded as simply derivatives of physiological states. However, the focus of meaning in the respective contexts seems to be more upon a particular period of time rather than upon a physiological state or condition.

to become to come to acquire or experience a state In some languages there is no convenient lexical item meaning simply ‘to become,’ but in all instances there are certain paraphrastic expressions which may be employed, for example, ‘to arrive at being’ or ‘to cease being one thing and be another’ or ‘to change to be.’ One must, however, beware in the case of JHN 1:14 not to employ some expression which would suggest that Christ had lost his divine nature in becoming a person or that he only appeared to be human (docetism).

to move, to come, to go to make a change of location in space (a highly generic meaning) Though the meaning of γίνομαι is often given as ‘to become,’ it is clear that in contexts such as ACT 25:15 and ACT 27:7 it would be impossible to render γίνομαι by traditional expressions such as ‘to become.’ In these contexts movement is clearly indicated, and therefore one must frequently employ an expression such as ‘to come to,’ ‘to arrive at,’ or even ‘to travel to.’

1 This meaning of γίνομαι and ἐπιγίνομαι reflects only a slight shift of focus from the meaning of γίνομαι in 13.48, in which the focus is upon the change. 2 It would also be possible to classify the meaning of γίνομαι[f] and ὑπάρχω[d] as belonging to the domain of Relations (89), especially if one regards the occurrence of the dative of the possessor with γίνομαι[f] and ὑπάρχω[d] as being an integral element in the meaning. 3 Of all the meanings in Domain 41 (Behavior and Related States), Subdomain A Behavior, Conduct, γίνομαι[g] is undoubtedly the most generic and implies the widest possible scope of conduct. 4 ἐγένετο δέ and καὶ ἐγένετο occur frequently in the Gospels, especially in Luke, as markers of transition, and in a number of languages they are equivalent to a new paragraph. Note the following passages especially: LUK 5:1, LUK 5:12, LUK 5:17; LUK 5:1, LUK 6:6, LUK 6:12; LUK 7:11; LUK 8:1, LUK 8:22; LUK 9:18, LUK 9:28, LUK 9:37, LUK 9:51. 5 γίνομαι γνώμης is similar to τίθημι ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ and τίθεμαι ἐν τῷ πνεύματι (30.76). All relate to the process of decision making, but it is possible that the idioms in 30.76 indicate greater initiative and purpose.

to have sexual intercourse with (a figurative extension of meaning of γινώσκω[a] to know, 28.1) In almost all languages there are euphemistic ways of speaking about sexual intercourse, and the use of γινώσκω[f] and συνέρχομαι[c] is illustrative of this in the Greek NT. It is possible to translate γινώσκω in LUK 1:34 as simply for I am not married to a man, and likewise, συνέρχομαι in MAT 1:18 may be rendered as ‘before they were married.’ In some languages one may use such expressions as ‘before they were joined’ or ‘before they slept together’ or ‘before they discovered one another.’

1 JHN 8:32 In JHN 8:32 (γνώσεσθε τὴν ἀλήθειαν καὶ ἡ ἀλήθεια ἐλευθερώσει ὑμᾶς ‘you will know the truth and the truth will make you free’), it is also possible to understand γινώσκω as ‘to find out’ or ‘to learn’ (27.2). 2 It is possible that ἐπιγινώσκω[b] differs somewhat in meaning from γινώσκω[d] in focusing attention on what is understood or indicating that the process of understanding is somewhat more emphatic, but such a distinction cannot be determined from existing contexts.

ecstatic language, tongue, ecstatic speech an utterance having the form of language but requiring an inspired interpreter for an understanding of the content Most scholars assume that the phenomena described in ACT 2:4 (see 33.2) and in 1CO 14:2 are significantly different in that in one instance people understood in their own regional language or dialect and in the other instance an interpreter was required. It is for that reason that many interpret γλῶσσα in 1CO 14:2 as ecstatic speech, which was also an element in Hellenistic religions and constituted a symbol of divine inspiration.

knee central hinge joint of the leg where the thigh is joined to the lower leg In LUK 5:8 the phrase ‘fell on his knees before Jesus’ should normally not be rendered literally since it might imply accidental stumbling. A more satisfactory equivalent may be ‘knelt down before,’ as a sign of worship or gratitude.

The term γόνυ occurs in a number of idiomatic phrases in the NT. For example, in HEB 12:12 the command ‘to strengthen the weak knees’ should normally not be translated literally, but by an expression meaning ‘to strengthen determination’ or ‘to give courage to’ (see 25.152). The ‘bending of the knees’ in MRK 15:19 was a sign of mock respect, and in such a context the term for ‘knee’ is often semantically absorbed into an expression meaning literally ‘bow down before’ (see 53.61).

the Scriptures, the holy writings (pl; ὧν f) the sacred writings of the OT Some translators have mistakenly attempted to use the rendering ‘Bible’ when translating αἱ γραφαί ‘the Scriptures’ in the NT. to write to make the marks that form words on a surface (paper or other material), using a marking instrument (such as a pen) Since the knowledge of writing is almost universal, there is usually no difficulty in obtaining a satisfactory term for writing. In some instances in which languages are only now being reduced to writing, a phrase is often employed, for example, ‘to make marks on paper’ or ‘to talk with lines’ or ‘to speak with paper.’

noun, f. | -αικός | γυναικάριον · γυναικεῖος

9.34 · People · Females woman an adult female person of marriageable age In some languages it may be awkward to speak of ‘arresting men and women,’ since it is normal in such languages to speak of ‘men and women’ simply as ‘people.’ However, where the distinction of ‘men and women’ can be employed, it should be done, since the arresting of women for presumed heresy in NT times would seem far less justified than the arresting of men, who were supposed to take a more active part in new movements and thus were more likely to be arraigned before authorities.

As a form of address, γυνή was used in Koine Greek in speaking politely to a female person: ὦ γύναι, μεγάλη σου ἡ πίστις ‘Lady, your faith is great’ MAT 15:28. In JHN 2:4 Jesus uses γυνή to address his mother courteously.

In a number of languages it would be totally impossible to have Jesus address his mother merely as ‘woman.’ To do so in some languages would imply that Jesus was denying that Mary was his mother. In other languages, such an expression would imply that Jesus was calling his mother a prostitute or evil person. Accordingly, in a number of languages there is simply no other way in which Jesus could address his mother than as ‘mother’ or ‘my mother.’
