λαγχάνω

λαγχάνω (G2975)

verb | aor. ἔλαχον · subj. λάχω · ptc. λαχών

57.127 · Possess, Transfer, Exchange · Receive to receive to receive, with the implication that the process is related somehow to divine will or favor It is, however, possible to interpret λαγχάνω in ACT 1:17 and in 2PE 1:1 as referring to the process of divine choice and thus translate as ‘be chosen to have.’

ACT 1:17 · 2PE 1:1

30.104 · Think · To Choose, To Select, To Prefer

to choose by lot, to decide by gambling to choose by lot, probably by the use of marked pebbles or pieces of pottery In a number of languages the closest equivalent to ‘casting lots,’ particularly for this type of context, is ‘to gamble.’

JHN 19:24

30.106 · Think · To Choose, To Select, To Prefer

to be chosen by lot, to be selected by lot to be selected by a decision based on the casting of lots, with the possible implication of reflecting divine choice

λαῖλαψ

λαῖλαψ

λαῖλαψ (G2978)

noun, f. | -απος

14.6 · Physical Events and States · Wind

windstorm, whirlwind, squall sudden and violent gusts of winds, often from varied directions¹ In a number of languages a strong wind which causes the waves or a storm on water must be referred to by a special term. Compare, for example, the English term squall; this would mean a wind of relatively short duration but sufficiently intense so as to create relatively high waves.

MRK 4:37 · LUK 8:23 · 2PE 2:17

¹ It may very well be that θύελλα and λαῖλαψ differ somewhat with respect to the suddenness of wind or the force of the wind. In certain contexts outside of the NT, λαῖλαψ would appear to be a somewhat stronger wind than θύελλα, but this is by no means certain, and for the NT there is no way to determine whether such a distinction is relevant.

to show favoritism, to be partial, partiality (an idiom, literally: to take face) to make unjust distinctions between people by treating one person better than another ‘To show favoritism’ or ‘to be partial’ is expressed in an idiomatic manner in some languages, for example, ‘to look only upon a person’s face,’ ‘to call a sparrow a chicken,’ or ‘to give one’s clansman the best piece of meat.’

Collocation: λαμβάνω τὸν σταυρόν

to be prepared to suffer even unto death, to take up one’s cross (a productive idiomatic expression, literally: to take one’s cross) to be prepared to endure severe suffering, even to the point of death The idiom ‘to carry one’s cross’ or ‘to take up one’s cross’ involves a number of important features of meaning. Unfortunately, this expression is frequently not understood correctly by many people who hear it or even use it. One reason for this is the actual absence of crucifixion in modern society. If a literal translation is to be employed, then some marginal note will probably be necessary in order to indicate clearly the full implications of such a statement.

MAT 10:38

68.58 · Aspect · Try, Attempt

Collocation: πείραν λαμβάνω

to try, to attempt to attempt to do something, with the implication of not succeeding⁶ In a number of languages expressions such as πειράζω[d], πειράομαι, and πείραν λαμβάνω may be expressed as to start to do something, but not be able to or to think that one can do something, but discover it is impossible.

HEB 11:29

1 λαμβάνω[b] in the sense of to acquire is highly generic. 2 There may be some subtle distinction in meaning between δέχομαι[a] on the one hand and λαμβάνω[c] and λήμψις on the other, in that the latter set of meanings may imply more active participation on the part of the one who receives or takes the gift, but this cannot be determined from existing contexts. 3 There are no doubt certain subtle distinctions of meaning in this series of related expressions in 90.63 (ἀπολαμβάνω[e], ἐπιλαμβάνομαι[f], λαμβάνω[h], μεταλαμβάνω[b]), but it is difficult to determine the precise distinctions on the basis of existing contexts. As in the case of a number of verbs which mark an experiencer relation, an equivalent translation consists simply of a passive form of a verb related to the noun complement. For example, in the case of JHN 7:23, one might very well translate ‘if a person is circumcised on the Sabbath.’ 4 HEB 11:36 In HEB 11:36 πείραν ‘trial’ is semantically redundant in that ἐμπαιγμῶν and μαστίγων contain by implication the semantic components of πείραν. 5 JHN 13:12 One might argue that λαμβάνω in JHN 13:12 should have merely the common meaning of taking (18.1) or receiving (57.125), but in this context there is more involved than merely taking along an outer garment. The reference is clearly to the act of putting on the outer garment. It might be possible to explain this unusual sense of λαμβάνω in JHN 13:12 as being based upon some kind of ellipsis. 6 The phrase πείραν λαμβάνω may be regarded as a so-called low-grade idiom, or λαμβάνω may be regarded as a relatively empty term which serves primarily to mark case relations.

33.131 · Communication · Name to call, to name to use an attribution in speaking of a person It is not always possible to determine from the context whether the act involved is an initial naming of a person or simply calling a person by a particular name. Likewise in the case of attributions or titles, it is not always possible to determine whether it is a matter of giving an attribution or title to a person or simply a matter of speaking of or to a person by means of such an attribution or title. In some instances the giving of a title may be made indirect. For example, in MAT 1:23 the statement ‘and they will call his name Emmanuel’ suggests the giving of a title, but the process is stated in terms of how people will speak of this person.

λέπρα

λέπρα (G3014)

noun, f. | -ας | λεπίς

23.161 · Physiological Processes and States · Sickness, Disease, Weakness

leprosy, dread skin disease a dreaded condition of the skin, including what is now regarded as leprosy, as well as certain other types of infectious skin diseases, resulting in a person’s being regarded as ceremonially unclean and thus excluded from normal relations with other people¹

MAT 8:3 · MRK 1:42 · LUK 5:12 · LUK 5:13

1 There are significant differences of opinion with regard to the nature of λέπρα as mentioned in the NT. Some authorities insist that this type of disease is not in any way related to so-called Hansens disease, while others assume that it does include Hansens disease as well as a number of other skin ailments, including psoriasis, seborrhea, and pinto (a white, spotted discoloration of the skin). From the standpoint of the biblical text, the factor of ritual uncleanness or impurity was even more important than the physical malady.

2.24 · Natural Substances · Earth, Mud, Sand, Rock

stone a piece of rock, whether shaped or natural Some languages make an important distinction between ‘stone’ as a substance (as in ACT 17:29) and ‘stones’ as individual pieces of rock (as in MAT 4:3). The term λίθος in the NT may be employed in speaking of rather large stones, for example, the stone placed in front of the tomb of Jesus (MAT 27:60) and the stones of the foundation of the Temple buildings (MAT 24:2). In all such contexts, however, the reference is to stones which have been moved into position or which are capable of being moved, even though with some difficulty.

In some languages an important distinction is made between stones which are shaped for use in building and stones which occur in a natural form, for example, ‘field stones.’ In each instance the biblical context must be studied to determine what type of expression should be used.

Collocation: λίθος τίμιος precious stone, gem valuable stones and hard substances, especially gems and jewels For another interpretation of τίμιος in 1CO 3:12, see 65.2.

Precious stones are often distinguished on the basis of cost, appearance, or function, for example, ‘stones that cost much’ or ‘stones that are beautiful’ or ‘stones that are worn for decoration.’

A number of precious and semiprecious stones (see 2.30-2.43) are mentioned in one NT passage, namely, REV 21:19, and though there are certain differences of opinion among scholars as to the precise reference of certain of these terms, there is more or less general agreement as to the color of the stones in question.

In languages in which terms such as ‘jasper,’ ‘sapphire,’ ‘agate,’ etc. exist, one may simply borrow such terms and explain their color in a glossary or word list. For languages in which such terms are not known, translators normally borrow the names from a dominant language of the area and likewise provide an explanation of the color in a glossary. Some translators have attempted to introduce the corresponding color terms in the text of REV 21:19, but this often results in a rather extended and somewhat awkward set of descriptive expressions.

¹ A distinction is made here between λίθος[a] stone as a substance (2.23) and λίθος[b] stone as a particular piece of rock (2.24). It would be possible to combine these two meanings, since in so many instances there is an almost automatic shift between a substance and an object consisting of such a substance. Since, however, a number of languages make clear distinctions between terms for substances and those referring to corresponding objects, this difference in meaning is retained in the case of λίθος and in most instances of similar semantic associations.

harbor a relatively small area of the sea which is well protected by land but deep enough for ships to enter and moor λιμήν may be rendered in some languages by a descriptive phrase, ‘a place where ships are safe from the storm’ or ‘a place where ships are never damaged’ or ‘a place where ships may stay.’ In ACT 27:12 it is difficult to know whether the reference of λιμήν is to the harbor as a convenient place for the ships to stay during the winter, or to the port (that is to say, the town at the harbor) as a convenient place for people to stay during the winter. Some languages make a clear distinction between the area where ships stay and where people may stay waiting to continue their voyage.

lake of fire, hell (an idiom, literally: lake of fire (and sulfur), occurring in some slightly different forms six times in Revelation, three times with the addition of θεῖον ‘sulfur’) a place of eternal punishment and destruction¹ In a number of languages it is impossible to translate literally ‘lake of fire,’ since water and fire seem to be so contradictory that a lake of fire is not even imaginable. It may be possible in some instances to speak of ‘a place that looks like a lake that is on fire,’ but in other languages the closest equivalent may simply be ‘a great expanse of fire.’ In some parts of the world people are fully familiar with the type of boiling magma in the cone of volcanoes, and terms for such a place may be readily adapted in speaking of ‘a lake of fire,’ since volcanic activity would seem to be the basis for this particular biblical expression.

23.33 · Physiological Processes and States · Eat, Drink

famine, hunger a widespread lack of food over a considerable period of time and resulting in hunger for many people¹ In a number of languages the only way of talking about a famine is to say ‘many people were very hungry for a long time’ or ‘many people had to go for days without anything to eat.’ It is important to distinguish clearly between a famine and voluntary abstinence from food for the sake of fasting. (See Domain 53H.)

to be quite hungry, considerable hunger, lack of food the state of being very hungry, presumably for a considerable period of time and as the result of necessity rather than choice (compare νηστεία[a] ‘fasting,’ 53.65) Terms referring to hunger often distinguish varying degrees of hunger and whether the hunger is by necessity or by choice.

LUK 15:17 · ROM 8:35 · 2CO 11:27

1 λιμός[a] could be classified as a physical event, since a famine results from lack of rainfall or some natural disaster causing crops to fail. However, since a famine is so specifically related to peoples experience of hunger, it seems best to classify λιμός[a] together with other expressions involving lack of food.

1 It would be possible to treat λίνον[a] linen cloth (6.165) and βύσσος fine linen (6.166) as meaning linen garments and fine linen garments respectively. However, there is no need for setting up such a separate meaning for NT usage, especially since in both REV 15:6 and LUK 16:19 the semantic element of garment or clothing is a significant compound of the verb meaning to dress, and thus the referents would naturally be garments. The same applies to πορφύρα (6.169) in LUK 16:19.

1 λόγος[c], particularly in contexts such as COL 3:16 and ACT 19:20, represents a highly specialized meaning of λόγος in the NT. Compare MRK 2:2, ἐλάλει αὐτοῖς τὸν λόγον ‘he talked to them about the gospel,’ and LUK 1:2, ὑπηρεταὶ γενόμενοι τοῦ λόγου ‘being servants of the good news.’ 2 λόγος[d] appears to differ from γράμμα[b] (33.50) in denoting a somewhat more formal treatment of the subject matter. 3 ACT 20:24 In ACT 20:24 the negation οὐδενός has been syntactically combined with λόγου rather than with τιμίαν, with which it is semantically more closely connected. Compare English ‘I didn’t think he would go’ in contrast with ‘I thought he would not go.’

wolf wild, four-footed, predatory canine; light-brown fur, similar to jackal, but much bigger; Canis lupus; regarded as ravenous and fierce; commonly prey on flocks; symbol of roaming, opportunistic, dangerous, fierce, and clever banditry In areas of the world in which wolves are not known, some translators have rendered λύκος[a] by the local equivalent of ‘leopard’ or ‘jaguar.’ This may be satisfactory for initial translations of the Scriptures, but such shifts in reference are normally rejected at a later stage by those readers who become more acquainted with the types animals which exist in other parts of the world. In most instances in which local terms for ‘wolf’ do not exist, translators have used descriptive phrases such as ‘wild dog’ or ‘fierce, wild dog,’ or they may have borrowed a term from a dominant language in the area and have added a qualifying phrase, for example, ‘a wild animal called wolf.’ One may, of course, simply use a more generic expression with some kind of qualifier. For example, in ACT 20:29 it is possible to use ‘fierce, wild animals,’ for the meaning of the passage is primarily figurative, and a specific designation of wolf is not required.

to ruin, to destroy, destruction to destroy or to cause the destruction of persons, objects, or institutions In a number of languages it is difficult to find a general term for ‘destruction.’ What has often happened is the extension of meaning from a more specific type of reference, for example, ‘to smash,’ to a more generic meaning of ‘to destroy,’ and whether one understands the specific or more generic meaning depends largely upon the context. Accordingly, in ACT 8:3 one may find a figurative usage of a term meaning ‘to smash’ (though understood in a more generic sense), for example, ‘Saul then worked in order to smash the church.’

37.127 · Control, Rule · Release, Set Free

to release, to set free to release from control, to set free (highly generic meaning applicable to a wide variety of circumstances, including confinement, political domination, sin, sickness)¹ In a number of languages there are problems with a somewhat literal translation of λυθῆναι ἀπὸ τοῦ δεσμοῦ τούτου in LUK 13:16 since the expression is highly figurative. The reference, of course, is to the woman's condition as a cripple. Furthermore, it may not make sense to speak of 'Satan binding' such a person, as in the first part of verse 16. In a number of languages, therefore, one may speak of 'Satan causing the woman to be a cripple,' and then in the latter part of verse 16, one may speak of 'causing a person no longer to be a cripple.'

1 It is possible that ἀπολύω[c] is somewhat more emphatic in meaning than λύω[b] in view of the prepositional prefix ἀπο, but NT contexts are not sufficient to indicate any precise degree of distinction. The same possible distinction also applies to the meanings in 37.128. 2 There are undoubtedly some significant differences of meaning in this series in 13.38, but it is not possible to determine the distinctive differences on the basis of existing contexts. 3 1JN 3:8 The phrase τὰ ἔργα τοῦ διαβόλου ‘the works of the Devil’ may be regarded either as something which the Devil has done and therefore something which exists (in which case the meaning of λύω is appropriately in Domain 13), or the phrase could mean ‘what the Devil is doing,’ and accordingly λύω could be interpreted as a type of aspect, that is to say, it would mean ‘causing an activity to cease.’ There are a number of such problems involved in meanings which may be interpreted as fitting either into Domain 13 or into Domain 68 Aspect.
