1 In this semantic analysis, no distinction is made between the articular and the pronominal use of ὁ, ἡ, τό. In the articular construction, ὁ, ἡ, or τό simply occurs together with a substantive, while in the pronominal usage, there is no combined substantive, since the substantive is fully understood from the context.

27.17 · Learn · Learn to lead someone to know, to guide someone in learning (a figurative extension of meaning of ὁδηγέω[a] ‘to lead, to guide,’ 15.182) to guide someone in acquiring information¹

JHN 16:13 · ACT 8:31

1 Meanings which involve acquisition of information by formal or informal instruction overlap to a considerable extent with the domain of Communication (33). In some contexts the focus seems to be upon the fact of verbal communication, while in other contexts, it is learning which appears to be in focus. It is for that reason that a number of these related meanings are included in this domain of Learn, for example, μανθάνω[a] (27.12), μανθάνω[b] (27.15), μαθητής[b] (27.16), and ὁδηγέω[b] (27.17).

41.35 · Behavior and Related States · Particular Patterns of Behavior

Way, Christian way of life (a figurative extension of meaning of ὁδός[a] ‘road, way,’ 1.99) behavior in accordance with Christian principles and practices In a number of languages it is impossible to preserve the figurative meaning of ὁδός in ACT 9:2, and therefore it may be necessary to translate the first part of ACT 9:2 simply as ‘so that if he could find any who were followers of Christ’ or ‘... those who were Christians.’

ὁδοὺς (G3599)

noun, m. | ὁδόντος

8.20 · Body, Body Parts, and Body Products · Parts of the Body

tooth one of a set of hard, bony structures set in the mouth of humans and many animals; used for chewing and biting There are several problems involved in the rendering of ὁδοὺς. Even in the case of REV 9:8 it may be necessary to use two different terms for teeth, since human teeth may be referred to by expressions quite different from those used in referring to the teeth of animals. In ACT 7:54 the idiom ‘to grind one’s teeth’ denotes anger (88.184), but a literal rendering of ‘to grind the teeth’ may mean in some languages merely ‘to be nervous.’ The expression βρυγμός τῶν ὁδόντων ‘gnashing of the teeth’ is used in connection with the tortures of hell (LUK 13:28), but a literal rendering of such a phrase can be quite misleading, since it may refer merely to the eating of some hard substance. See 23.41.

7.3 · Constructions · Buildings house, home, dwelling, residence a building or place where one dwells The size of an οικία[a] or of an οἶκος[a] (7.2) may differ greatly. For example, the house referred to in LUK 7:10 would no doubt have been relatively elaborate, and in MAT 11:8 οἶκος[a] refers to the palace in which Herod lived. In a number of languages it is important to distinguish clearly between various types of dwellings depending upon their size and presumed importance. Accordingly, in rendering οικία[a] or οἶκος[a] it is necessary to use a number of different terms roughly equivalent to the English series ‘cottage,’ ‘house,’ ‘official residence,’ ‘palace,’ ‘temple,’ etc.

In a number of languages one must distinguish carefully between a house and a home. A term meaning ‘house’ would be used in referring to any dwelling as a construction, while a term meaning ‘home’ would be used in referring to the more or less permanent dwelling of a particular person. In MRK 2:1, for example, it is significant to indicate that Jesus was dwelling in the house through the roof of which the paralyzed man was let down.

42.34 · Perform, Do · Make, Create

to build up, to construct, construction the construction of something, with focus on the event of building up or on the result of such an event In 1CO 3:9 the phrase θεοῦ οικοδομή has been interpreted by many as ‘a dwelling place for God’ (see 7.1), but it is more likely that the Christian is regarded as the result of God’s activity, that is to say, the believer is ‘God’s construction’ or ‘that which God has made.’ οικοδομή in 2CO 5:1 (οικοδομήν ἐκ θεοῦ ἔχομεν ‘we have a construction from God’) may be regarded as having essentially the same meaning as in 1CO 3:9, though the reference here is to the glorified body.

1 οικοδομή[a] may be interpreted as a derivative of οικοδομέω[a] to construct (45.1), or the latter may be interpreted as a causative derivative of οικοδομή[a], with the meaning to cause a building to exist. In view of the highly generic nature of οικοδομή[a], it is perhaps better to interpret it as a derivative of the corresponding event expression (45.1) since this seems to be the predominant pattern of derivative correspondences. But because of the obvious material form of constructions as buildings, οικοδομή[a] is introduced into Domain 7 as a generic for all the other meanings.

10.24 · Kinship Terms · Kinship Relations Involving Successive Generations

lineage, family line persons of successive generations who are related by birth In biblical times the reckoning of a lineage was somewhat complex in view of certain distinctions between legal and biological relations. The focus of meaning in γένεσις[b], οἶκος[c], and πατριά[a] is not, however, the list of ancestors, but the lineage of successively related persons to which the reference person belongs. Some scholars, however, interpret γένεσις[c] history, 33.19).

In some languages a successive series of ancestors is called ‘the forefathers’ or ‘those to whom one looks back’ or ‘those who have gone ahead.’ In other languages a lineage is referred to as ‘a person’s root’ or ‘a man’s trunk’ (referring to the trunk of a tree).

In LUK 2:4 there appears to be no significant difference in meaning between οἶκος and πατριά, and in some receptor languages it would be sufficient to use a single term essentially equivalent to ‘lineage.’ The two terms appear to simply reinforce their shared meaning.

and as far north in Europe as England and Scandinavia. This was the total known earth or world. Such a restriction to a known area of the earth is also true of terms used in some receptor languages, though the referents are obviously different. What is important is not the particular area of the earth, but the corresponding concept of the surface of the earth as the place of human habitation. It is possible that οἰκουμένη[a] differs slightly in meaning from γῆ[a] and κόσμος[b] in view of a somewhat greater emphasis or focus upon the civilized part of earth. 2 LUK 2:1 In LUK 2:1 οἰκουμένη[b] refers specifically to the inhabitants of the empire, though the meaning of οἰκουμένη[b] is simply the Roman Empire as a region, a governmental entity, and a population.

noun, m. | -ου | οἰνοπότης · οἶνοφλυγία · πάροις

wine a fermented beverage made from the juice of grapes¹ Though some persons have argued that whenever mention is made of Jesus either making or drinking wine, one must assume that this was only unfermented grape juice, there is no real basis for such a conclusion. Only where οἶνος νέος ‘new wine’ (6.198) is mentioned can one assume that this is unfermented grape juice or grape juice in the initial stages of fermentation.

In a number of languages there is no indigenous term for wine, and some expression may simply be borrowed from a dominant language. On the other hand, it is sometimes possible to employ a descriptive phrase, for example, ‘fermented fruit juice.’ In some languages the equivalent for ‘wine’ is more specifically ‘palm wine,’ that is to say, a wine made from the sap of certain palm trees. Such a term may also have a more generic meaning and be applicable to any kind of wine.

There are a number of passages in the NT where one must be particularly careful in the selection of terms to translate wine. For example, in EPH 5:18 a literal translation of ‘do not get drunk with wine’ could be interpreted to mean that it is permissible for one to get drunk on other types of intoxicating liquors. It may, therefore, be necessary in some languages to render EPH 5:18 as simply ‘do not get drunk.’

In LUK 10:34 (κατέδησεν τὰ τραύματα αὐτοῦ ἐπιχέων ἔλαιον καὶ οἶνον ‘he poured on olive oil and wine and bandaged his wounds’) it is important to recognize the medicinal value of oil and wine. In some instances translators have indicated the purpose of such an activity by translating ‘to cleanse and heal his wounds he poured wine and oil on them and bandaged them.’ It may also be possible to add in a marginal note information as to the antiseptic quality of the wine and the value of the oil in the healing process.²

myrrhed wine a set phrase referring to wine drugged with myrrh and used as a stupefying potion³ In general, ἐσμυρνισμένος οἶνος must be rendered by means of a phrase or a clause, for example, ‘wine which has been mixed with a drug called myrrh’

or ‘wine mixed with a drug to reduce pain.’ It is, of course, also possible to use an abbreviated phrase such as ‘myrrhed wine’ and then to place the explanation of its function in a marginal note.

MRK 15:23

1 It is possible that the phrase γένημα τῆς ἀμπέλου product of the grapevine (MAT 26:29) should be classified as a fixed phrase meaning wine, but it is also possible to treat this phrase as semantically endocentric (that is, non-idiomatic), in which case the reference could potentially be either grapes or wine. 2 Though the various terms for wine and olive oil might very well be treated simply in the category of Food (Domain 5), they obviously served other functions as well, for wine was used medicinally as an antiseptic and olive oil was used not only for food but also for illumination in lamps. Since both the production of wine and olive oil involved relatively elaborate processes, it therefore seems best to classify them as artifacts rather than subsume them under various functional categories. 3 The term ἐσμυρνισμένος οἶνος can be seen as semantically endocentric (σμυρνίζω, ‘mixed with myrrh’ and οἶνος, ‘wine’). However, due to its specific role in the passage of MRK 15:23, it was included in this semantic field.

crowd, multitude a casual non-membership group of people, fairly large in size and assembled for whatever purpose¹ In a number of languages there is no term corresponding to ‘crowd.’ One may, however, usually speak of such a group of people as ‘many people’ or ‘many men and women.’ Depending on the context, it may be necessary to indicate some relative difference in size, for example, ‘very large crowd’ or ‘many, many people.’ If the crowd is relatively small, one may sometimes speak of ‘just some people.’

This word is found as a variant reading only: πᾶς ἐπὶ τῶν πλοίων ὁ ὄμιλος ‘all the crowd in ships’ REV 18:17 (apparatus).

¹ In this set of terms referring to a crowd or a multitude, it is possible that πλήθος[b] denotes a somewhat larger group of persons than the other terms and that λαός[c] suggests a crowd made up of common people, but one cannot be certain of these distinctions from existing contexts.

33.274 · Communication · Profess Allegiance to profess, to confess, confession to express openly one's allegiance to a proposition or person It is often extremely difficult, if not impossible, to translate ὁμολογέω[a], ὁμολογία, and ἐξομολογέω[b] by the usual expression for 'confess,' since this would usually imply that one has done something wrong. It is normally necessary, therefore, to employ quite a different type of relationship, usually involving a public utterance and an expression of confidence or allegiance. For example, in MAT 10:32 it may be necessary to translate 'whoever tells people publicly that he is loyal to me, I will tell my Father that I am loyal to that person.' Similarly, in HEB 10:23 one may translate 'let us hold on to the hope in which we have told people we have such confidence.' of a donkey (derivative of ὄνος ‘donkey,’ 4.31) pertaining to a donkey In rendering MAT 18:6 it is important to avoid the impression that a donkey would turn the millstone in the same way that a person would. Sometimes a general causative expression may be used, for example, ‘a millstone that a donkey causes to go round (rotate),’ but it may actually be necessary to say ‘... which a donkey causes to go round (rotate) by pulling on a shaft.’ In fact, a marginal note may be necessary in order to avoid serious misunderstanding and to emphasize the fact that such a millstone was large and heavy.

The meaning is simply that there should never be a reason for having to speak about greed, since the people should not themselves be guilty of such behavior.

ὄνος (G3688)

noun, m./f. | -ον | ὄναριον · ὄνικός

4.31 · Animals · Animals

donkey, ass domestic animal belonging to the same family as the horse, but smaller and with longer ears; it can have variety of colors from dark brown, through light brown to gray and occasionally white; Equus Asinus africanus; used to ride on, carry loads, or do other work In the context of JHN 12:15 the reference is obviously to a female donkey. In languages in which there is no word for ‘donkey,’ it is usually best to borrow a term from a dominant language rather than attempting some type of descriptive equivalent. For example, in one language a descriptive designation, namely, ‘a long-eared animal,’ was understood by the people as referring to a rabbit. In some languages donkey is referred to as ‘a kind of small horse’ or ‘a small horse-like animal.’

Though in Greek the article and/or other attributives to the noun ὄνος indicate by their forms whether ὄνος is to be understood as masculine or feminine, in a number of languages quite different terms are employed for a male or female donkey.

ὀργή (G3709)

noun, f. | -ῆς | ὀργίζομαι

88.173 · Moral and Ethical Qualities and Related Behavior · Anger, Be Indignant With anger, fury a relative state of anger In a number of languages it is impossible to speak of ‘anger’ without indicating against whom the anger exists. For example, in 1TI 2:8 it might be possible to say ‘to pray without anger against anyone’ or ‘to pray without being angry at anyone.’

to punish, punishment divine punishment based on God’s angry judgment against someone Though the focal semantic element in ὀργή[b] is punishment, at the same time there is an implication of God’s anger because of evil. Therefore, it is possible in some languages to translate this expression in ROM 3:5 as ‘God does not do wrong when he is angry and punishes us, does he?’

ὄριον

noun, n. | -ον | ὀρίζω

1.79 · Geographical Objects and Features · Sociopolitical Areas

region, territory, land, district (though this might imply too precisely a governmental area) region or regions of the earth, normally in relation to some ethnic group or geographical center, but not necessarily constituting a unit of governmental administration¹ The meanings of γῆ[d], χώρα[b], κλίμα, ὄριον, and μέρος[c] are not to be regarded as completely synonymous, but in certain of their NT usages they are largely overlapping in reference.

MAT 2:16 · MAT 4:13 · MAT 8:34 · MAT 15:22 · MAT 15:39 · MAT 19:1 · MRK 5:17 · MRK 7:24 · MRK 7:31 · MRK 7:31 · MRK 10:1 · ACT 13:50

1 The overlapping features of meaning in γῆ[d], χώρα[b], κλίμα, ὄριον, and μέρος[c] may be readily illustrated by the comparable overlapping of English terms such as region, territory, and land. For example, in the case of MAT 15:21 it would be possible to speak of the region of Tyre and Sidon, the territory of Tyre and Sidon, the land of Tyre and Sidon, and even the district of Tyre and Sidon. The English terms region, territory, land, and district do differ in certain nuances of meaning reflecting primarily supplementary components which are largely connotative.

verb | ἐνορκίζω · ἐξορκίζω · ἐξορκιστής · ἐπιορκέω · ἐπίορκος · ὄρκος · ὀρκωμοσία

33.467 · Communication · Swear, Put Under Oath, Vow

to put under oath, to insist that one take an oath, to require that one swear to demand that a person take an oath as to the truth of what is said or as to the certainty that one will carry out the request or command¹ It is extremely difficult to translate ὀρκίζω, ἐνορκίζω, and ἐξορκίζω in a literal manner, though in some contexts one can say ‘I put you under oath,’ but in a number of passages the person speaking is imploring and not necessarily in a position to command or insist. Therefore, in a passage such as MRK 5:7, one may render the meaning idiomatically as ‘for God’s sake, I ask you, do not punish me.’ In 1TH 5:27 one may translate ‘in the name of the Lord, I ask you to read this letter to all the Christian brothers,’ and in MAT 26:63 one may translate ‘in the name of the living God, I charge you, Tell us who you are.’

In most languages one may translate ὀρκίζω, ἐνορκίζω, and ἐξορκίζω by simply adding a causative component to terms meaning ‘to swear’ or ‘to take an oath.’ In other words, ὀρκίζω, ἐνορκίζω, and ἐξορκίζω may be rendered as ‘to cause a person to say under oath.’

MRK 5:7 · ACT 19:13

1 It is possible that ὀρκίζω, ἐνορκίζω, and ἐξορκίζω differ slightly in meaning, but this cannot be determined on the basis of available contexts.

1.46 · Geographical Objects and Features · Elevated Land Formations mountain a relatively high elevation of land, in contrast with βουνός hill (1.48), which is by comparison somewhat lower. Terms referring to mountains, hills, or mounds inevitably reflect the nature of the surrounding landscape. For example, in the flat marshlands of the Central Sudan, an elevation called Doleib Hill is only some three or four feet above the surrounding area, but in the Himalayas elevations of land some ten or twelve thousand feet are still regarded as hills in contrast with the mountains. In the choice of receptor language terms for ὄρος and βουνός (1.48), one must seek expressions which suggest corresponding differences. What is important is relative size, not an exact correspondence to biblical geography. It may, however, be necessary in some instances to introduce a footnote to describe the approximate height of certain biblical mountains or hills.

15.244 · Linear Movement · Dance

to dance, dancing patterned rhythmic movements of the whole and/or parts of the body, normally to the accompaniment of music In a number of languages there are highly specific terms for various types of dancing, and one must make certain that the appropriate expression is used. Some terms for dancing may refer only to erotic dances; others, to highly ritualized performances in drama or religious practice; and still others may refer to personal expressions of happiness, joy, or grief. Special care must be exercised in selecting a term which will fit the context.

devout, godly, dedicated pertaining to being dedicated or consecrated to the service of God In some languages it is essential to distinguish between ἅγιος and ὅσιος when these refer to God (see 88.24) and when they refer to persons or objects which have been consecrated to the service of God. It is both theoretically and practically advantageous to make a significant distinction in meaning on the basis of these contextual differences which occur in the Greek NT. It is not difficult to translate ἅγιος and ὅσιος by expressions meaning ‘dedicated to God,’ ‘devout,’ ‘pious,’ etc., but it may be extremely difficult to translate ἅγιος and ὅσιος when applied to God. In some languages one can only use an expression such as ‘he who is truly God’ or ‘he who is in every respect God.’

1 REV 8:1 It is possible that ὅταν occurs in REV 8:1 because of the prophetic nature of the context, so that in reality, though the verb is in the past tense, the reference is ultimately to a future event which is indefinite in time. If this is the case, then ὅταν[b] may simply be classified with ὅταν[a] (67.31).

that, the fact that a marker of discourse content, whether direct or indirect The marking of direct and indirect discourse varies greatly from language to language. In some instances there is no marker at all; in other cases one marker precedes and another follows. In still other instances a repetition of an expression of speaking occurs at the end of a quotation, whether direct or indirect. In a number of languages written usage differs appreciably from spoken usage, because intonation so often marks introduced discourse in the spoken form of a language.

69.13 · Affirmation, Negation · Markers for an Affirmative Response to Questions

not a marker of a strongly emphatic affirmative response to a question

JHN 11:56 · JHN 18:11

1 οὐ[a] and μή[a] are lexically equivalent in meaning, but they have a syntactic distribution which may be said to give them certain distinctions in so-called class meaning. However, since these differences are based upon syntactic distributions, such distinctions in meaning are beyond the scope of this type of lexical analysis. The form οὐ, of course, tends to occur primarily in indicative clauses, while μή occurs generally in non-indicative clauses. 2 MAT 27:13 In a number of languages, however, an affirmative response to such a question would be indicated by a negative particle, so that the answer to the question in MAT 27:13 would be ‘no.’ 3 The combination οὐ μή[d] may be regarded technically as a type of idiom in that the two negations do not cancel each other out, but constitute an emphatic negation.

heavenly, in heaven, pertaining to heaven (derivative of οὐρανός[b] heaven, 1.11) related to or located in heaven The derivatives οὐράνιος and ἐπουράνιος[b] are essentially equivalent to semantic compounds in that they combine a semantic element of heaven as a celestial abode with another semantic element specifying location or relationship. Frequently such terms are translated as ‘in heaven’ or ‘from heaven’ or ‘belonging to heaven.’

throng of angels, ranks of angels (an idiom, literally: heavenly army) a large group or throng of angels There may be distinct objections to speaking of στρατιά οὐράνιος as being a ‘heavenly army,’ though undoubtedly in earlier times the thought of angels being God’s military force would have been quite appropriate. Therefore, in place of some expression which may refer to an army or military unit, it may be possible to translate στρατιά οὐράνιος as simply ‘many, many angels’ or ‘row after row of angels.’

from the sky the sky as a source or as a location from which implied movement takes place οὐρανόθεν in ACT 14:17 and ACT 26:13 is somewhat ambiguous, for both events may be regarded as involving a semantic derivative of οὐρανός[b] heaven (1.11) rather than οὐρανός[a] sky (1.5). In ACT 14:17 one might very well translate ‘he gives rain from heaven,’ since obviously the agent is God. Similarly, in ACT 26:13 the light might come from heaven, since the light is presumably regarded as a supernatural phenomenon.

1.5 · Geographical Objects and Features · Regions Above the Earth

sky space above the earth, including the vault arching high over the earth from one horizon to another, as well as the sun, moon, and stars In ACT 2:5 the expression ‘under the sky’ is better translated in a number of languages as ‘on earth,’ and in HEB 11:12 ‘the stars of the sky’ is effectively rendered in many instances as ‘the stars up above,’ though in many languages ‘up above’ is not only redundant, but misleading, since it might suggest stars that would not be ‘up above.’ The area described by the phrase ἀπ’ ἄκρων οὐρανῶν ἕως τῶν ἄκρων αὐτῶν in MAT 24:31 refers to the limits of the horizon regarded as the limits of the sky, but in many languages the equivalent is an expression dealing with the limits of the earth.

In some contexts οὐρανός[a] ‘sky’ designates areas which in other languages are referred to by terms specifying only a part of the area above the earth. For example, a literal translation of ἐμβλέψατε εἰς τὰ πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ‘look at the birds of the sky’ (MAT 6:26) would in some languages refer only to those birds which fly particularly high in the sky, for example, eagles, vultures, and falcons. The Greek expression τὰ πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ simply designates wild birds in contrast with domestic fowl, such as chickens. Therefore, in translating ‘the birds of the sky,’ one may wish to use a general designation for all wild birds. See also 4.41.

The sky (οὐρανός[a]) is also represented in the Scriptures as a dwelling place of certain supernatural beings, for the various stars and constellations were associated with supernatural forces (see στρατιὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, literally ‘the army of heaven,’ in ACT 7:42: ὁ θεὸς ... παρέδωκεν αὐτοὺς λατρεύειν τῇ στρατιᾷ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ‘God ... gave them over to worship the stars of the heaven’). In some languages, however, there is a problem with the rendering ‘stars of heaven,’ since such an expression might imply that there are types of stars which do not exist in the sky. Therefore, it is often more appropriate to translate στρατιὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ as simply ‘the stars.’ At the same time it is often advisable to introduce a marginal note to indicate that the stars were regarded as symbols of supernatural beings. One may also translate στρατιὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ as ‘supernatural beings in the sky’ or ‘powers that dwell in the sky’ (see 12.45).

The semantic equivalent of οὐρανός[a] is in some instances merely an adverb meaning ‘up’ or ‘above.’ In other languages the various areas referred to by οὐρανός[a] must be designated by more specific terms or phrases, for example, ‘the region of the stars,’ ‘the place of the clouds,’ or ‘where the wind blows,’ as a way of designating at least three different areas which may be significant in certain types of contexts.

heaven the supernatural dwelling place of God and other heavenly beings (οὐρανός[b] also contains a component denoting that which is above or in the sky, but the element of abode is evidently more significant than location above the earth) In a number of languages precisely the same term is used to designate both ‘sky’ and ‘heaven’ (as the abode of God). But in many instances a completely separate term must be employed in speaking of the dwelling place of God, for example, ‘where God lives’ or ‘where God is’ or ‘from where God governs.’ In some languages the term referring to ‘heaven’ is simply ‘the home above,’ and in one instance a designation of heaven refers primarily to a state, for example, ‘the life above.’

The phrase τρίτος οὐρανός ‘the third heaven’ is a fixed phrase referring to the abode of God (ἀρπαγέντα τὸν τοιοῦτον ἕως τρίτου οὐρανοῦ (a man) who was caught up as far as the third heaven’ 2CO 12:2), but in a number of languages it is extremely difficult to speak of ‘the third heaven,’ especially if one uses a term for ‘heaven’ which is ‘the abode of God.’ Therefore, in many instances τρίτος οὐρανός is translated as ‘heaven’ or ‘the abode of God,’ and if necessary, a footnote may be added in order to indicate the literal meaning of the Greek expression. If a literal rendering is employed, it is usually equivalent to ‘the third sky’ or ‘above two degrees of sky.’

God (a figurative extension of meaning of οὐρανός[b] ‘heaven,’ 1.11) a reference to God based on the Jewish tendency to avoid using a name or direct term for God A translation such as ‘I have sinned against God’ would seem to be so much simpler than ‘I have sinned against heaven,’ but in reality it is not easy to find a satisfactory expression for ‘sinning against God.’ It is, of course, possible to speak of ‘fighting against a person,’ but ‘to sin against a person’ involves a very complex relationship which often needs to be more clearly explained, for example, ‘I have sinned against what God has said’ or ‘I have sinned by doing what displeases God.’ In some languages a strictly literal rendering of ‘I have sinned against God’ might be understood in the sense of committing some kind of sin with God.

heaven and earth, universe a more or less fixed phrase: the heavens and the earth, equivalent to a single lexical item: the totality of God’s creation There may be certain complications involved in rendering ὁ οὐρανὸς καὶ ἡ γῆ as ‘heaven and earth,’ since ‘heaven’ might be interpreted in some languages as referring only to the dwelling place of God himself. The referents in this passage are ‘the sky and the earth,’ in other words, all of physical existence, but not the dwelling place of God, for the latter would not be included in what is destined to pass away.

In EPH 1:18 καρδία denotes the mind (see 26.3), so that the phrase ‘the eyes of the mind’ really means ‘the capacity for understanding which the mind has.’

Collocation: τυφλόω τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς

to cause to not understand, to make unable to comprehend (an idiom, literally: to blind the eyes) to cause someone to no longer have the capacity for understanding Though in some languages there is a close relationship between the eyes and comprehension, in many languages it is simply impossible to use the idiom ‘to blind the eyes’ in speaking of ‘causing someone not to understand.’ The problem becomes particularly difficult in speaking of ‘darkness blinding the eyes’ as in 1JN 2:11. People can understand how ‘bright light would blind the eyes,’ but it would be strange indeed to think of ‘darkness’ having such an effect. In the context of 1JN 2:11, the darkness is, of course, not literal darkness but a state of sinfulness. Therefore, in some languages it may be necessary to translate ‘their sinfulness has made it impossible for them to understand’ or ‘because they sin, they cannot understand.’

JHN 12:40 · 1JN 2:11

1 1CO 12:17 It would, of course, be possible to interpret ὀφθαλμός in 1CO 12:17 as meaning simply ‘eye,’ and therefore one might translate ‘as if the whole body were an eye.’ But the following terms such as ἀκοή (24.53) and ὁσφρησις (24.71) indicate quite clearly that it is the sensory faculty or capacity which is involved.

snake, reptile long legless reptile; no eyelids or external ears; moves by wriggling or gliding; some species have a poisonous bite; symbol of lurking, unexpected danger; associated with lies, deception, and misleading teaching Though ὄφεις[a] may refer to any kind of snake, in LUK 10:19 it is obviously a reference to a poisonous snake that would harm a person who stepped on it. In translating LUK 10:19 it is essential to avoid an expression which will mean merely ‘to walk on snakes’ as though one were to walk for some distance over a mass of swarming snakes. The implication of this context is simply that one is able to step on snakes without being harmed.

evil person, viper, snake (a figurative extension of meaning of ὄφεις[a] snake, 4.52) a dangerous and despised person One must exercise due caution in rendering ἔχιδνα in MAT 12:34 and ὄφεις in MAT 23:33, since in some cultures snakes are regarded as being particularly wise and clever, and therefore an expression such as ‘brood of vipers’ could be a compliment.

In some languages important distinctions are made between different types of snakes, and therefore connotations may vary considerably.

stronghold, fortress a strong military fortification The term ὀχύρωμα occurs in the NT only in 2CO 10:4, where it is used figuratively of the strength of false arguments. In a number of languages it may be more satisfactory to render ὀχύρωμα as a kind of simile so as to mark this figurative usage, for example, ‘powerful weapons with which to destroy false arguments in the same way that people would destroy fortresses.’ In some languages a ‘fortress’ may be described in terms of its function, for example, ‘a place for protection’ or ‘a place to defend oneself.’ Often, however, a fortress is described in terms of its construction, for example, ‘a strong-walled place.’
