song a particular melodic pattern with verbal content In a number of languages it is impossible to use a combination such as 'to sing a new song.' One can, however, often use an expression such as 'to sing with new words' or 'to utter a new song.' In employing terms for 'to sing' or 'song,' it is important to avoid an expression which will apply only to some restricted type of music, for example, translated hymns using melodies from Western Europe.

¹ The meanings of ῥόν ‘egg’ (5.18) and γάλα ‘milk’ (5.19) could be classified under Body Products in Domain 8, but in the NT contexts the focus is upon these products as food and not upon the physiological processes involved in producing such products.

67.1 · Time · A Point of Time without Reference to Other Points of Time: Time, Occasion, Ever, Often time, occasion points of time consisting of occasions for particular events¹ In a number of languages there is no general term for ‘time’ or ‘occasion.’ In some contexts it is simply not necessary to have such a term. For example, in rendering MAT 13:30 one may translate ‘when the harvest comes, I will say to the reapers’ or ‘when people begin to harvest, I will say to the reapers.’ In other contexts, a term which normally refers to some unit is employed in a generic sense, as in the case of Greek ῥα which means literally ‘hour’ but is frequently used as a generic expression for a point of time, as in MAT 8:13. In ACT 7:17 χρόνος may often be rendered by a generic expression such as ‘day,’ for example, ‘when it was almost the day for God to keep his promise.’ In the case of MAT 26:45, the nearness of the time may be indicated as ‘very soon the Son of Man will be handed over.’

Though it seems quite ordinary in English for one to speak of ‘time coming’ or ‘... drawing near,’ this type of figurative usage is impossible in many languages. The equivalent may be simply ‘will soon be’ or ‘is about to happen.’ The expression οὐπω ἤκει ἡ ῥα μου (literally ‘my time has not yet come’) in JHN 2:4 denotes that it is not yet the occasion for a particular event (see καιρός in JHN 7:8 and compare JHN 7:10) but that it will soon be. In these contexts the expression may be rendered as ‘there is still time’ or ‘I will soon do it.’ In JHN 7:30 and JHN 8:20 (οὐπω ἐληλύθει ἡ ῥα αὐτοῦ ‘his time has not yet come’) the reference is to the occasion of his eventual arrest, implying that it will indeed happen.

67.148 · Time · Indefinite Units of Time: Age, Lifetime, Interval, Period

a while an indefinite unit of time which is relatively short For languages which have no term for an indefinite unit of time which is relatively short, it may be necessary to approximate the time span in the context, for example, ‘for several months’ or possibly ‘for a year or so.’

67.199 · Time · Definite Units of Time: Year, Month, Week, Day, Hour

hour one-twelfth of a day, measured from sunrise to sunset (in any one day the hours would be of equal length, but would vary somewhat depending on the time of the year) Since the hours were counted beginning at sunrise, the seventh hour would be approximately one o’clock in the afternoon. 67.77 · Time · A Point of Time with Reference to Units of Time: Daybreak, Midday, Midnight, Late

Collocation: ὥρα πολλή

late, very late (an idiom, literally: much hour) a point of time relatively late in view of the circumstances (late in the afternoon or in the evening)

67.42 · Time · A Point of Time with Reference to Other Points of Time: Before, Long Ago, Now, At the Same Time, When, About, After

Collocation: ἡ ἄρτι ὥρα

at this very moment, at this very time (an idiom, literally: the present hour) an emphatic reference to a point of time which is simultaneous with another point of time

1CO 4:11

1 Some terms which designate a unit of time in their so-called literal meanings may also have the meaning of point of time, as in the case of ὥρα, which in MAT 26:45 is essentially an indicator of a point of time, but in 67.148, it is treated as a unit of time. The same may occur in the case of ἡμέρα, which as a unit of time is treated in 67.142, but in the expression day of the Lord it indicates essentially a point of time.

that, the fact that a marker of discourse content, whether direct or indirect The marking of direct and indirect discourse varies greatly from language to language. In some instances there is no marker at all; in other cases one marker precedes and another follows. In still other instances a repetition of an expression of speaking occurs at the end of a quotation, whether direct or indirect. In a number of languages written usage differs appreciably from spoken usage, because intonation so often marks introduced discourse in the spoken form of a language.

verb (Aramaic loanword)

33.364 · Communication · Praise

hosanna (an Aramaic expression meaning ‘help, I pray’ or ‘save, I pray,’ but which had become a strictly liturgical formula of praise) a shout of praise or adoration In MAT 21:9 ὥσαννὰ τῷ υἱῷ Δαβὶδ may also be rendered as ‘praise to you, Son of David’ or ‘we praise you who are the Son of David’ or ‘... a descendant of David.’

Though for many early Christians, and especially those of Jewish background, ὥσαννά would be known from its Aramaic background as meaning ‘help’ or ‘save,’ nevertheless, its association with liturgical expressions involving praise and exaltation resulted in the expression acquiring quite a different significance; hence, a phrase such as ‘hosanna in the highest’ became equivalent to ‘praise be to God.’ For growing numbers of Christians without Jewish background, ὥσαννά probably acquired much the same meaning as it now has in English.
